AN EXTRAORDINARY CASE OF A BILIOUS ATTACK, INDIGESTION, AND FLATULENCY, CURED BY HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Khalratee Khan, a native merchant of Patna, in the East Indies, suffered for years from bile, indigestion, and flatulency, and although he consulted the most eminent surgeons of the province, yet he derived no benefit from their treatment, but gradually became more debilitated. Having one day a severer attack than usual of those dreaded maladies, he determined to try Holloway's Pills, 'and this medicine, which has obtained such high repute throughout the world, very soon reinstated him in perfect health; and, in gratitute for the benefit, he desires this wonderful cure to be made public.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native venders of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

CLEAR and SOFT SKIN.—ROWLANDS' KALY-DOR,—an Oriental Balaamic Preparation, perfectly free from all mineral or metallic adminstrue. It is distinguished for its extremely bland, purifying, and soothing effects on the skin; while by its action on the pores and minute secretory vessels, it expels all impurities from the surface, allays every tendency to inflammation, and thus effectually dissipates all redness, tan, pimples, spots, freckles, discolorations, and other cutaneous visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, and the softness and delicacy which it induces on the hands and arms, render it indispensable to every toilet. To ladies during the period of nursing, and as a wash for infants, it cannot be too strongly recommended. Gentlemen, after shaving, will find it allay all irritation and tenderness of the akin, and render it soft, smooth, and pleasant. During the heat and dust of summer, or frost and bleak winds of winter, and, in cases of sun-burn, stings of insects, chilblains, or chapped skin, or incidental inflammation, its virtues have long and extensively been acknowledged. Its purifying and refreshing properties have obtained its exclusive selection by Her Majesty the Queen, the Court, and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and the several courts of Europe, toyether with the clite of the aristocracy, from the sultry climes of India to the frozen realms of the Cear.—Beware of spurious "Kalyddes" for sale, containing mineral astringents utterly ruinous to the complexion, and by their repellent action endangering health. The words—"Kowlanns' Kalyddes" are on the wrapper of the genuine article; and the words "A. Rowlanns' Son, 20, Hatton Garden," are also engraved (by desire of the Hon. Commissioners) on the Government stamp affixed on each bottle. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. Sold by the proprietors and by all respectable Chemists and perfumers. VLEAR and SOFT SKIN.—ROWLANDS' KALY-

ISTORY of the PUNJAB, and of the Rise and Progress of the Sect and Nation of the Sikhs, including a full Account of the Military Operations on the Banks of the Sute in 1846, and the Proclamations and Treaties of the Governor-General of India relating thereto. By THOMAS THORNTON, Eq. 2 vols. post 8vo. cloth lettered, price 21s.

"These volumes should be in the library of every one who feels an interest in the recent military exploits of our Army of the Sutlej, or in our future political relations of the Punjab. The work has, indeed, this double value;—It is valuable for present and permanent reference.... Independently, however, from any temporary interest which these volumes may derive from the recent events in the Punjab, they present much curious matter to the historical student, as well with regard to the religious character of the sect from which has sprung the warlike race of modern Sikhs, as with respect to the character and policy of Runjeet Singh,"—John Bull.

"The work gives all the information on the history and topography of the Punjab that could be desired; and in the fulness and completeness of its details, and the diligence with which information has been collected, from every available source, constitutes this the best and most authentic work extant on the important coun ry of which it treats."—Britannia.

"It is an authentic work, and its statements are perfectly trustworthy. Indeed, it will be necessary for every one having a library to add this to the historical department, while the miscellaneous reader will find a powerful claim in its novel and stirring information."—Cheltenham Journal.

ADVANTAGES OF THIS INSTITUTION.

ECONOMICAL RATES OF PREMIUM computed expressly for the use of the Company, and presenting the means of effecting policies in a great variety of ways, to suit the objects and circumstances of the assured. Among others the two following tables are particularly deserving of attention:

1. A table of rates (No. II.) whereby little more than balf the amount of premium ultimately payable upon the policy is required during the first seven years, without any deduction from the sum assured when the policy becomes a claim.

2. An extensive table of the company table o a claim.

2. An extensive table of rates (No. V.) for reversionary annuities, presenting to husbands, fathers of families, and others, one of the cheapest and best possible modes of securing, in the event of premature death, a provision for the especial objects of their solicitude.

Complete security afforded to the assured by means of an ample subscribed espital—by the registration of assignments of policies—by the admission of age and interest, during life, where the same have been astisfactorily proved and by other regulations for facilitating the objects and protecting the interests of all bond fide policy holders.

The following peculiar advantages are offered by this Company:—
Their policies cover the risk of living and voyaging over a far larger portion of the globe than do those issued by any other Company in existence. They allow the assured to reside in the Australasian and North American colonies, and at the Cape of Good Hope. They also allow to the assured for the whole of life one passage out and home to any of those colonies. For British India a very moderate extra premium is charged, and the premium is reduced to the English scale on the return of the assured life to England for permanent residence.

Premium may be noted and claims settled at Swinger where there is a Beard.

2. Premiums may be paid, and claims settled at Sydney, where there is a Board of Directors and Trustees; and at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, where there are Agents.

3. A third of the premiums may remain unpaid for five years; nor is it necessary for the maintenance of the Assurance to pay up the premium at the end of that time, but the unpaid thirds may remain as a debt against the pollog, if the interest be regularly paid upon them as the remewal premiums fall due.

The Annuities offered by the Company are on a more favourable scale than those offered by any other Company are on a more favourable scale than those offered by any other Companies, having been calculated with reference to the rates of interest obtainable on Colonial Investments. Annuitants also participate in the profits.

NEW MAP OF THE PUNJAB

AND SIKH TERRITORIES.

Drawn by JOHN WALKER. On One Sheet, price 5s., or in a Case, 6s.

"A new Map of these districts has just been published by Messrs. ALLEW and Co., of Leadenhall Street, upon which apparently great care has been bestowed. The Map is very clearly printed, and the scenes of the military operations, to which so much interest is at present attached, are laid down with such perspleuity, that it would be easy to follow almost every march of the army. The Map is said to have been compiled from the most authentic sources of information."—Times, March 1, 1849.

"A new Map of the Punjab and Sikh Territory, just completed by Messra.

ALLEN, and compiled from the most authentic sources of information, with great care, contains all the places mentioned in the accounts of the military operations. At the present moment, it is a most valuable publication, and we heartly recommend it."—Naval and Military Gazette, March 3, 1849.

"Messrs. Allen have just issued a finely-engraved Map of the Punjab and Sikh Territory, with due attention to the spots where our gallant troops have so vallantly fought. Who, at the present moment, would not pore over such a Map,—with interest point out where the brave Cureton fell, or where Edwardes earned the wreath that now adorns his youthful brow? Or, if we take a more painful glance, how many mothers, sisters, friends, will not, with mourned eyes, wander in their imagination along the banks of the Chenab, and mark the spot upon the Map where a son, a brother, or a friend lies buried in an honourable grave on the bloody field of Chillianwallah? And such a Map was wanting, and Messrs. Allen have at once provided one with great care and skill. This Map folds up in a neat cover, and can be carried in the pocket."—Morning Chronicle, March 6, 1849.

"Messrs. Allen's Map is mounted on cloth, and compactly folded in a book-cover. The whole of the places on the banks of the Five Rivers are carefully and accurately indicated. The progress of the campaigns can be traced without the slightest difficulty."—United Service Gazette, March 19, 1849.

"This new Map of the Punjab, which has just been completed, is compiled from the latest and most authentic sources of information, and is unquestionably the fullest and most perfect Map of that, at the present period, most interesting district of India hitherto published. It has evidently been executed with great care, and contains all the places named in the accounts of the recent military operations clearly laid down."—Herald, March 14, 1849.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

Ir the intelligence received by this mail merely confirmed officially the fact of the decisive victory of Goojrat, it would be highly acceptable; but it goes still further, and affords substantial grounds for believing that the Sikh army on the Jelum, lately so formidable, is in a military sense extinct, and that the close of the campaign will be the termination of the war.

The despatches, which are unusually numerous and full, contain all the details of this most important action, in which the qualities of the British troops shone out in their pristine lustre.

The Sikh army, numbering 60,000 men, with 59 pieces of artillery, commanded by Chuttur Singh and Shere Singh, with a body of 1,500 Affghan horse, under Akram Khan, a son of Dost Mahomed Khan, was concentrated at Goojrat (between the Chenab and the Jelum, nearer the former river than the latter), their camp encircling the town, and their regular troops being posted between the town and the dry bed of a small river which passed round two of its sides. After a reconnoissance of their position, which was strong, but by no means so formidable as that previously occupied by them on the Jelum, Lord Gough commenced the attack early in the morning of the 21st February. The British army amounted to about 25,000 men.

The disposition of his forces is very minutely described in Lord Gough's despatch. Halting the infantry out of the fire of the enemy's guns, our artillery was brought forward, consisting of 96 guns, some of heavy calibre, and opened upon the enemy, as the Commander-in-Chief expresses it, "magnificently." Its effects were terrible, and although the enemy's guns were well served, and their resistance was obstinate, the Sikhs were forced to fall back; whereupon the British troops were ordered to advance, covered by their artillery and after one or two sharp contests, especially at the village of Burra Kaira, the key of the enemy's position, the Sikhs were driven back at all points, and finally expelled from Goojrat and the villages, some of which were stormed, and their retreat became a flight, the right wing of the British army, Brigadier Campbell's division, pursuing them to the eastward of the town, and the Bombay column, under Brigadier-General Dundas, to the westward. The result of the battle was, the capture of 57 guns (four being found since the date of Lord Gough's despatch), the whole of the ammunition, camp equipage, and baggage of the enemy, who must have suffered an immense loss of men (Akram Khan being severely wounded), whilst that of the British was 5 European officers killed and 24 wounded, and a total of 92 killed and 682 wounded.

A private letter says :-

"The battle on the 21st inst. was a well-fought, well-managed, and ne dattie on the 21st inst. was a well-rought, well-managed, and smashing affair. The old chief had determined to use his artillery freely, and he did so. Ninety-six of our guns 'opened the ball,' and played the very deuce with the enemy. The latter's artillery and played the very deuce with the enemy. The latter's artillery was well and pluckily served, but their gunners were all shot down, the carriages of their guns knocked about, and their horses, bulcoks, buffaloes, &c. all killed. I saw one team of six bay horses lying in their harness, regularly riddled by our shrapnel. Men also with their heads blown off by our big shot. I hear that their infantry (the regular) tried three times to come on, and make a dash at our guns, but each time, when they arrived within fire, they could not stand it, and went back again. The cavalry and the troops of horse artillery were then sent in pursuit and followed for about twelve coss never giving the enemy time to rally, for whenever they attempted it, bang went the guns into them. The cavalry lads say, in every field some twenty or thirty were shot down; arms, chogas, shoes, &c. were lying in hundreds all about, having been thrown away by the fugitives in order to travel lighter. The pursuit stopped only when the artillery horses were quite done up."

The engagement is represented in the private accounts as chiefly "an artillery affair," and this arm consequently suffered most. The 2nd Bengal European regiment had the heaviest infantry work to do, at the village of Barra Kaira, in conjunction with the 31st and 70th regiments of native infantry, and it sustained a considerable loss.

The plan of the battle, given in a succeeding page, will illustrate the details in the despatches.

A letter had been intercepted from Chutter Singh recommending Shere Singh to fall back on Jellalpore, on the further side of the Jelum, betwixt Russool and Pind Dadun Khan.

A letter from the camp states that the colour of the 24th Foot had been recaptured.

Early in the morning after the battle, a force under Major-General Gilbert resumed the pursuit of the enemy into the Khoree Pass, towards the Jelum, and a division of infantry, under Brigadier Campbell, advanced on the road to Bimber, on the borders of the hill country, whilst a body of cavalry, under Colonel Bradford, accompanied by Captain Nicholson, penetrated some miles into the hills.

General Gilbert's force reached the entrance of the Khoree Pass on the 23rd, and the Bombay division halting there, Brigadier Mountain went through the gorge of the pass, which was very strong, to Pooran, in the midst of a storm of hail and torrents of rain. The march was resumed on the 24th, but the wreck of the enemy's army had succeeded in crossing the river, and were seen when the British troops reached Noorungabad, on the left bank of the Jelum, encamped on the right bank of the river, on either side of the town of that name. Major Lawrence, who had arrived in the camp of General Gilbert, crossed the river, and communicated with Shere Singh, by whom he was charged with propositions with which he immediately started for the camp of the Commander-in-Chief. Akram Khan had continued his flight to Attok. On the the 27th General Gilbert passed a portion of his force across one of the branches of the Jelum, and this seems to have been the signal for the troops of Golab Singh, which had been quietly encamped at Meerpoor, to act against the losing party.

On the 28th, and following days, the rest of General Gilbert's force, with reinforcements, crossed the Jelum, with considerable difficulty, which is split into several channels, the current being extremely rapid. As soon as Shere Singh heard that the British troops were crossing the river, he retired with the relics of his army, not exceeding 8,000 or 10,000 men, with ten guns.

The latest intelligence of the operations of General Gilbert is scanty and hurried. He had obtained possession of the pass of Bukreealah, which had been occupied by Shere Singh; and a letter from his camp, dated "Rhotas, March 3rd," states that,—

"On the 1st more troops crossed the main stream, while others moved to the right bank of the river, and on the 2nd marched to Rhotas, which is a very large picturesque-looking place, and might have been strong before the days of gunpowder, but with artillery opposed to it, it could not resist two hours, being made of brick and commanded by several hills near it. The road from the ford to Rhotas lies through a very finely-cultivated country, and pretty scenery; but nothing that could have stopped the advance of our army. Of the movements of the Seiks I know little; the villagers report them to have gone to Rowill Pinn, with only five guas, and that the Mussalmans have risen and thrashed Utter Sing, and many other things, which are to be doubted."

Amongst the matters "to be doubted" we may include a report of the death of Maharaja Golab Singh, stabbed, says one account, by one Jowahir Singh, because he refused to assist Shere Singh against the British; poisoned, according to another statement, by his khansamah, at the instigation of his nephew.

Brigadier Mountain had been compelled to relinquish his command, having been wounded in his hand by the accidental discharge of a pistol whilst he was placing it in the holster.

It is understood that the force of General Gilbert, which numbers about 16,000 men, with forty guns, would endeavour to occupy not only Rhotas, but Attok, Peshawur, and other places of strength up to the Khyber Pass. It is said that our political agents have succeeded in inducing the Khyburees to resist the return of the Affghans. The General Order of the Governor-General declares that "the war must be prosecuted with vigour and determination, to the entire defeat and dispersion of all who are in arms against us, whether Sikhs or Affghans."

The native correspondent at Lahore of the Delhi Gazette, states that the Commander-in-Chief had issued a proclamation, to the effect that, "if any person in Goojrat were found harbouring any of the rebels, a forced contribution of Rs.2,00,000 would be levied from the town."

The main body of the grand army, under the Commander-in-Chief, was expected to fall back upon Lahore and Ferozepore, and at the date of the latest advices from the camp, permission to leave had been granted to several officers. Lord Gough is said to have resigned the command, and to have set out for Simla. Major-General Whish had left the camp on the 1st for Lahore, and it was believed that he would proceed to Calcutta, to assume the command of the presidency division.

The ex-dewan Moolraj had arrived at Lahore.

It appears that if Brigadier-General Wheeler ever received any instructions to move across the Ravee, they must have been countermanded, as his camp was still at Deenanuggur on the 24th of February, but he was to march on the 1st to the Beas.

The troops remaining at Mooltan continued healthy; Scinde was tranquil, and India generally quiet and contented. The Governor-General was at Ferozepore.

The Calcutta and Bombay papers contain nothing noticeable at these presidencies. Those of Madras report from Goomsoor that Chokra Bisshye continues still at large; and from Hyderabad, that the approval by the Supreme Government of the nomination of Shums-ool-Omrah to the office of Dewan had been duly intimated; in consequence of which the ceremony of his installation took place on the 28th of February, when the Resident attended, and is said to have shown the utmost cordiality to the new minister. The appointment is to a certain extent popular.

A Bombay journal mentions that the district of Berar was being disturbed by the doings of a warlike Gosacen, who had raised the standard of revolt, and given out that he was the veritable Appa Rajah, come to claim his kingdom of Nagpore. He had succeeded in collecting some 1,000 men, Arabs, Rohillas, &c. The local authorities of the Nizam were taking steps to put him down.

The intelligence from China comprises few incidents of any moment. An interview had taken place between Governor Bonham and the Chinese Commissioner Seu, who, it is surmised, was not favourable to opening the gates of Canton. Nothing has transpired, but it is reported that Seu has sent to Pekin for positive and final orders from the Emperor.

HISTORY OF MOOLTAN.*

IN A.D. 1469, Sooltan Hoossein, son of Sooltan Kootub-ood-Deen, upon the death of the latter, obtained the government of Mooltan. Sheikh Yoosoof, who had been removed from the government on the appointment of Kootub-ood-Deen, came to Sooltan Belol Lodi, governor of Delhi, and entreated his assistance; and Belol sent his eldest son, Bareek Shah, with a wellappointed force. A battle took place between Sooltan Hoossein and Bareek Shah, in which the latter was discomfited, and returned to Delhi.

At this time, Mulik Sohráb, of the Dodace Beloch tribe, arrived from Kech Mekran, with his sons Ishmael Khan and Putteh Khan, with others of their tribe, and entered the service of Sooltan Hoossein. As the hill robbers were troublesome in the province of Mooltan, the Sooltan rejoiced at their arrival, and assigned to Mulik Sohrab the country from the fort of Kuror to Deen-kot. On this, many other Beloches came from Kech Mekran, and entered the service of the Sooltan, who assigned to them the lands along the banks of the Indus, and the revenue began to increase. Hajee Khan, his son Ghazee Khan, and many of their kindred and tribe, came from Kech Mekras, to enter the service of Sooltan Hoossein. When the tracts along the Indus were in the hands of Mulik Sohrab and Hajee Khan, the fermer founded a Dera, named after Ishmael Khan, and the latter another named Ghazee Khan.

During the indolent rule of Muhmood, the grandson of Sooltan Heosesia, Ghazee Khan seized the greater part of the dependencies of Mooltan, and assumed the government, and was succeeded by his son Hajee Khan, who, taking advantage of the weakness of the government of Hindoostan, then under Ibrahim Lodi, took possession of several districts on the Indus, towards the south, and became independent.

When Humayoon reigned at Delhi, and the countries of the Punjab, Mooltan and Sindh came into the hands of the Choogette princes, Ghazee Khan the fifth obtained from Humayoon Dera Ghazee Khan and its dependencies in jagheer, which were secured to his family in succession.

In A.D. 1739, Nadir Shah having conquered the emperor Mobunsated Shah, the latter resigned to him the fort of Attok and other places to the north and west; also Mooltan, the Dersjat, Sindh and Cabul. When the Badshah came from Dera Ishmael Khan to Dera Ghazee Khan, on his march to Sindh, Ghazee Khan the tenth was confirmed by him in the tenure of the Dera and its dependencies. On the death of this Ghazee Khan, in A.D. 1758, without issue, his kindred became dispersed, and the Dera and its dependencies lapsed to the sovereign of Cabul and Maharaja Konra Mull, who had been nominated Soobahdar of Mooltan by the court of Delhi, in 1746, was appointed governor by Ahmed Shah.

In 1767, Nuwab Ali Mohummud Khan Khakawance received the Soobahdaree of Mooltan from Ahmed Shah, who, on his return from his expedition into India, being provoked by certain disrespectful acts of Ali Mohummud Khan, caused him and his son to be slain, sending their bodies into Mooltan as an example, and the Soobahdaree was conferred upon Nuwab Shooja Khan.

On the death of Ahmed Shah, the weakness of his successor, Timoor Shah, tempted Huree Singh and Chunda Singh, Sikh sirdars, who had obtained possession of some of the territories of the Daoodpootra chiefs, to attack Mooltan, but they were defeated by the Daoodpootras, headed by Mohummud Buhawul Khan, the chief of Buhawulpoor, founded by his family in 1746. In 1772, Hajee Shereef Suddozye was appointed Soobahdar of Mooltan by Timoor Shah; but, becoming careless, and not remitting payments to the Shah's treasury, he was removed in six months, and Mirza Shereef Beg and Lala Dhurm Das obtained jointly the government of Mooltan. They disagreed, and the Mirza caused his colleague to be shot. Dreading the consequences, he sent secretly for the two Sikh sirdars, Chunda Singh and Ganda Singh, who marched from Umritsur, with a large force, to Mooltan, and the Mirza, making a show of resistance to save his credit, fled to Khyrpoor, where he died, the sirdars becoming masters of Mooltan and its dependencies.

In 1777 the Khan of Buhawalpoor received an order from Timoor Shah to expel the Sikh Sirdars from Mooltan, and he accordingly, with his Daoodpootras, accompanied by Nuwab Mozuffur Khan, of Shoojaabad, which district had been invaded and plundered by the sirdars, laid siege to the city, into which, in twenty-three days, they gained an entrance, slaughtering the Sikhs and plundering the residents. The kiladar, placed in charge by the sirdars (who were at Umritsur), retired into the citadel, despatching intelligence to the sirdars; whereupon Gunda Singh, with a large force, hastened to Mooltan, and, after a battle, forced Buhawul Khan and Mozuffur Khan to retreat to Shoojaabad. Timoor Shah, hearing of their discomfiture, ordered Sirdar Behroo Khan to march against the Sikhs, and in 1778 he besieged the fort of Mooltan; but, owing to the invasion of Khorasan by the Toorkmans, he was recalled by Timoor Shah, and forced to raise the siege. Strdar Ali Muddud Khan was afterwards sent with a large army against Mooltan, Timoor Shah himself, in order to afford him support, encamping at Peshawur. Ali Muddud Khan had reduced the fort to extremity when he was recalled by Timoor Shah, in consequence of a conspiracy against his life.

In 1779 the Shah himself advanced with a great army against Mooltan, and having arrived at the Eedgah,* laid siege to the city, which soon fell into his hands; Gunda Singh being at this time too much occupied at Umritsur, in α contest with his family, upon the death of Chunda Singh, to assist the kiladar, who, despairing of relief, conciliated the Shah's clemency by timely surrender of the citadel. The Shah, on obtaining possession, proclaimed his sovereignty, bestowed the Soobahdaree of the province upon Mozuffur Khan, and returned to Cabul. Mooltan thus had remained in the power of the Sikh sirders for seven years, from 1772 to 1779.

Abstracted chiefly from "Fragments of the History of Mookan, the Detast and Buhawuipoot," from Persian MSS. By Lieut. R. Maclagam.

In 1814, Maharaja Runjeet Singh took the Dera from Zeman Khan Barukye, and conferred it and its dependencies upon Mohummud Sadik Khan, father of the present Nuwab of Buhawulpoor, at an annual rental of four lakhs. In 1831, Runjeet took into his own hands the district of Dera Ghezee Khan, and the rest of the country on that side of the river, held by Nuwab Mohummud Buhawul Khan, and the administration was committed to General Ventura, who remained there two years, and after him Dewan Sawun Mull (appointed Governor of Mooltan in 1821) was nominated nazim. This dewan ruled well, but was shot by a robber in 1814, when he was succeeded in the nizamut by his son

The province of Mooltan, in the reign of the Emperor Akbar, was one of the largest provinces in the empire, comprehending, besides Mooltan proper, Beloochistan, Sindh, Sewestan, Tatta and Bakr. Since the domination of the Sikhs, its dimensions have been reduced; its present boundaries are the Sutlej to the east, the Indus to the west, the province of Lahore on the north, and the territory of Buhawulpoor on the south, to which in 1836 was added the Mazaree territory.

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES.

From the Commander-in-Chief of India to the Governor-General of India.

Head-quarters, Camp, Goojerat, Feb. 26. My Lord, - By my letter of the 21st inst., written on the field of battle immediately after the action, your lordship will have been made acquainted with the glorious result of my operations on that day against the Sikh army, calculated, from all credible reports, at 60,000 men of all arms, and 59 pieces of artillery, under the command of Sirdar Chutter Singh and Rajah Shere Singh, with a body of 1,500 Affglian horse, led by Akram Khan, son of the Ameer Dost Mahomed Khan; a result, my Lord, glorious indeed for the very victorious army of India. The ranks of the enemy broken; their position carried; their guns, ammunition, camp equipage, and baggage, captured; their flying masses driven before the victorious pursuers from mid-day to dusk, receiving most severe punishment in their flight; and, my Lord, with gratitude to a merciful Providence, I have the satisfaction of adding that, notwithstanding the obstinate resistance of the enemy, this triumphant success, this brilliant victory, has been achieved with comparatively little loss on our side.

The number of guns taken in action and captured in the line of pursuit I now find to be 53.

The official report made by the adjutant general of the army on the 20th inst. will have informed your lordship that I had directed Brigadier-Gen. the Hon. H. Dundas to join me by forced marches, and that I had closed up to so short a distance of the Sikh army that they could not possibly attempt the passage of the Chenab, in order to put into execution their avowed determination of moving upon Lahore, make a retrograde movement by the Koree Pass (the only practicable one for guns), or indeed quit their position, without my being able to attack them and defeat their movement.

On the 18th inst. Brigadier Markham had proceeded from Ramnuggur, up the left bank of the river, to Kanokee, to which I had directed 47 boats to be sent up. On the morning of the 20th this officer crossed the Chenab by my instructions, and joined me at 11 o'clock A. M. At the same time Lieut.-Col. Byrne was directed to move down the left bank, from the posi-At the same time Lieut.-Col. tion he held in front of Wuzeerabad, with two corps of infantry and four guns, leaving two regiments of irregular cavalry to watch the fords, and to prevent any marauding parties or bodies of the routed enemy from effecting a passage. On the same day a reconnoissance was made of the enemy's position, and it was ascertained that their camp nearly encircled the town of Goojerat, their regular troops being placed immediately fronting us, between the town and a deep watercourse, the dry bed of the river Dwara. This nulla, which is very tortuous, passes round nearly two sides of the town of Goojerat, diverging to a considerable distance on the north and west faces, and then takes a southerly direction, running through the centre of the ground I occupied at Shadiwal. Thus the enemy's position on the right was greatly strengthened, the nulla giving cover to his infantry in front of his guns, whilst another deep, though narrow wet nulla, running from the east of the town, and falling into the Chenab in the direction of Wuzeerabad, covered his left. The ground between these nullas, for a space of nearly three miles, being well calculated for the operations of all arms, and presenting no obstacle to the movement of my heavy guns, I determined to make my principal attack in that direction, and disposed my force accordingly.

On the extreme left I placed the Bombay column, commanded by the Hon. H. Dundas, supported by Brigadier White's brigade of cavalry and Scinde horse, under Sir J. Thackwell, to protect the left, and to prevent large bodies of Sikh and Affghan cavalry from turning that flank; with this cavalry I placed Capt. Duncan's and Huish's troops of horse artillery, whilst the infantry was covered by the Bombay troop of horse artillery under Major Blood. On the right of the Bombay column, and with its right resting on the nulla, I placed Brig .- Gen. Campbell's division of infantry, covered by No. 5 and No. 10 light field batteries, under Major Ludlow and Lieut. Robertson, having Brigadier Hoggan's brigade of infantry in reserve. Upon the right of the nulla I placed the infantry division of Major-Gen. Sir W. Gilbert, the heavy guns, eighteen in number, under Majors Day and Horsford, with Capt. Shakespear and Brevet-Major Sir R. Shakespear, commanding batteries, being disposed in two divisions upon the flanks of his left brigade. This line was prolonged by Major-Gen. Whish's division of infantry, with one brigade of infantry under Brigadier Markham in support in second line, and the whole covered by three troops of horse artillery, Major Fordyce's, Captains Mackenzie's and Anderson's, and No. 17 light field battery, under Capt. Dawes, with Lieut.-Col. Lane's and Capt. Kinleside's troops of horse artillery, in a second line in reserve, under Lieut .- Col. Brind. My right flank was protected by Brigadiers Hearsey's and Lockwood's brigades of cavalry, with Capt. Warner's troop of horse artillery. The 5th and 6th light cavalry, with the Bombay light field battery, and the 45th and 69th regiments, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Mercer, most effectually pro-tected my rear and baggage. With my right wing, I proposed penetrating the centre of the enemy's line, so as to turn the position of their force in rear of the nulla, and thus enable my left wing to cross it with little loss, and in co-operation with the right to double upon the centre the wing of the enemy's force opposed to them.

At half-past 7 o'clock the army advanced in the order described, with the precision of a parade movement. opened their fire at a very long distance, which exposed to my artillery both the position and range of their guns. I halted the infantry just out of fire, and advanced the whole of my artillery, covered by skirmishers. The cannonade now opened upon the enemy was the most magnificent I ever witnessed, and as terrible in its effects. The Sikh guns were served with their accustomed rapidity, and the enemy well and resolutely maintained his position; but the terrific force of our fire obliged them, after an obstinate resistance, to full back. I then deployed the infantry, and directed a general advance, covering the movement by my artillery as before.

The village of Burra Kalra, the left one of those of that name. in which the enemy had concealed a large body of infantry, and which was apparently the key of their position, lay immediately in the line of Major-Gen. Sir Walter Gilbert's advance, and was carried in the most brilliant style by a spirited attack of the 3rd brigade under Brig. Penny, consisting of the 2nd Europeans, and the 31st and 70th regiments N.I., which drove the enemy from their cover with great slaughter. A very spirited and successful movement was also made about the same time, against a heavy body of the enemy's troops in and about the second or Chota Kalra by part of Brigadier Hervey's brigade, most gallantly led by Lieut.-Col. Franks, of H.M.'s 10th foot.

The heavy artillery continued to advance with extraordinary celerity, taking up successive forward positions, driving the enemy from those they had retired to, whilst the rapid advance and beautiful fire of the horse artillery and light field batteries, which I strengthened by bringing to the front the two reserve troops of horse artillery under Lieut.-Col. Brind, Brigadier Brooke having the general superintendence of the whole of the horse artillery, broke the ranks of the enemy at all points. whole infantry line now rapidly advanced, and drove the enemy before it; the nulla was cleared, several villages stormed, the guns that were in position carried, the camp captured, and the enemy routed in every direction, the right wing and Brig.-Gen. Campbell's division passing in pursuit to the eastward, the Bombay column to the westward of the town. The retreat of the Sikh army, thus hotly pressed, soon became a perfect flight, all arms dispersing over the country, rapidly pursued by our troops for a distance of twelve miles, their track strewn with the wounded, their arms and military equipments, which they threw away, to conceal that they were soldiers

Throughout the operations thus detailed the cavalry brigades on the flanks were threatened and occasionally attacked by vast masses of the enemy's cavalry, which were in every instance put to flight by the steady movements and spirited manœuvres of our cavalry, most zealously and judiciously supported by the troops of horse artillery attached to them, from whom the enemy received the severest punishment.

On the left a most successful and gallant charge was made upon the Affghan cavalry, and a large body of Ghoorchurras, by the Scinde Horse and a party of the 9th Lancers, when some standards were captured. The determined front shown by the 14th Light Dragoons and the other cavalry regiments on the right, both regular and irregular, completely overawed the enemy, and contributed much to the success of the day. The conduct of all in following up the fugitive enemy was beyond all

A competent force, under the command of Major-Gen. Sir Walter Gilbert, resumed the pursuit towards the Jhelum on the following morning, with a view of cutting off the enemy from the only practicable gun road to the Jhelum. Another division of infantry, under Brig.-Gen. Campbell, advanced on the road to Bimber, scouring the country in that direction to prevent their carrying off the guns by that route, and a body of cavulry, under Lieut-Col. Bradford, successfully pushed on several miles into the hills, and twenty-four from Goojerat, accompanied by that most energetic political officer, Capt. Nicholson, for the same purpose; whilst I remained in possession of the field for the purpose of supporting these operations, covering the fords of the Chenab, and destroying the vast magazines of ammunition left scattered in all directions. I am happy to add that these combinations have been entirely successful, the detached parties coming at every step on the wreck of the dispersed and flying foe.

Having endeavoured to convey to your lordship the particulars of the operations of the battle of Goojerat, I beg now to offer my heartfelt congratulations to your lordship, and to the Government of India, upon this signal victory, achieved, under the blessing of Divine Providence, by the united efforts and ndomitable gallantry of the noble army under my command,a victory, my Lord, as glorious to the army that gained it as it must be satisfactory to yourself and the Government of India, from the very important and decisive results to be expected

It is quite impossible for me sufficiently to express my admiration of the gallant and steady conduct of the officers and men, as well native as European, upon this occasion. brilliant service they have performed in so signally defenting so vastly superior a force, amongst whom were the élite of the old Khalsa army, making a last, united, and desperate struggle, will speak for itself, and will, I am confident, be justly estimated by your lordship. I cannot too strongly express to your lordship my deep sense of obligation to the general officers and brigadier-generals in command of divisions, who so ably carried out my views, and directed the operations of their troops on this I beg to annex for your lordship's information the reports I have received from them, and to bring most prominently to your lordship's notice the brigadiers commanding brigades, the commanding officers of the regiments, and of troops of horse artillery, and light field batteries, and the several officers of the divisional and brigade staff enumerated in these reports in terms of such just commendation. I feel much indebted to Major-Gen. Sir Joseph Thackwell, for the able and judicious manner in which he manœuvred the cavalry with horse artillery attached, on the left, keeping in check the immensely superior force of the enemy, whose main object was to turn my flanks. I am also greatly indebted to this tried and gallant officer for his valuable assistance and untiring exertions throughout the present and previous operations, as second in command with this force. To Major-Gen. Sir Walter Gilbert, whose services upon this, as on all former occasions, were invaluable, and ever marked by energy, zeal, and devotion; as well as to Major. Gen. Whish, Brigadier Generals Campbell and Dundas, for their able assistance, I am deeply indebted. To Brigadier-Gen. Tennant, commanding that splendid arm, the artillery, to whose irresistible power I am mainly indebted for the glorious victory of Goojerat, I am indeed most grateful. Conspicuous as the artillery has ever proved itself, never was its superiority over that of the enemy, its irresistible and annihilating power, more truthfully shown, than in this battle. The heavy batteries manœuvred with the celerity of light guns, and the rapid advance, the scientific and judicious selection of points of attack, the effective and welldirected fire of the troops of horse artillery and light field batteries merit my warmest praise, and I beg most earnestly to recommend their brave and gallant commanders, with the several officers named in Brigadier-Gen. Tennant's report, to your lordship's most favourable notice. From Brigadier Cheape, the chief engineer, and the talented officers in that department, as named in the brigadier's report, I have received the most valuable assistance in reconnoitring the enemy's position, and on the field of battle. The sappers and pioneers, under that most able officer, Capt. Siddons, did excellent service, and were ever in front to overcome any obstacle to the advance of the artillery. To the officers of the general staff of H. M.'s service, Major Lugard, acting adjt. general, and Lieut. Col. Gough, qr. master general of H. M.'s forces in India, my best thanks are due; their exertions upon the present occasion and throughout the recent operations were most valuable, and I beg to bring them under your lordship's favourable notice. I am equally indebted to Capt. Otter, acting assist. adjt.-general of H. M.'s forces, for his valuable services. To the officers of the general staff of the army, Lieut.-Col. Grant, adjr.-general, and Lieut.-Col. Gardon, qr.-master-general, whose most onerous and very important duties have invariably been conducted to my entire satisfaction, I am under the greatest obligation. valuable assistance in the field, and their indefatigable exertions throughout operations of no ordinary character, deserve my warmest thanks and your lordship's approbation. To Lieut. Col. Birch, judge-advocate-general, I am much indebted for his assistance upon every occasion. To Major Tucker, deputy adjt.-general, a most gallant, energetic, and valuable officer, to Lieut.-Col. Drummond, deputy qr.-master general, whose services have been very praiseworthy, to Major Chester, assist. adjt.-general, and Lieutenant Tytler, assist. qr.-master general, Lieutenant Johnson, deputy judge-advocate-general, Major G. Thompson, Lieutenant-Colonel Curtis, assistant commissary general, and Captain C. Campbell, paymaster to the army, I offer my best thanks for their services whilst attending me in the field, and the efficient manner they have performed their several duties. Mr. Franklin, inspector general of H. M.'s hospitals, has been unceasing in his exertions in rendering every aid to the sick and wounded of the Royal service, and giving the benefit of his long professional experience in such duties, as has Dr. Renny, superintending-surgeon of this army, who has been indefatigable in his professional exertions and well-organized medical arragements. I feel I cannot too prominently bring to notice the valuable exertions of Dr. Macrae, field surgeon, and of the medical officers of the army generally; they have been most unwearied and praiseworthy. To Capt. Ramsay, deputy commissary-general, and to the officers of that department, I am much indebted, and feel grateful for their unceasing and successful exertions amidst all difficulties to supply the troops, and thus preserve the efficiency of the army. officers of my personal staff have well merited my best thanks and your lordship's favou: able notice,—Capt. Haines, military secretary, who has rendered me most valuable aid; Brevet-Major Bates, nide-de-camp; Lieut. A. Bagot, aide-de-camp; Lieut. S. J. Hire, aide-de-camp; Capt. Gabbett, aide-de-camp; Lieut. G. Harding, aide-de-camp; and Lieut. W. G. Prender-gast, my Persian interpreter. I beg also to acknowledge the valuable assistance I have received from the political officers, Major Mackeson, Mr. Cocks, Capt. Nicholson, and Lieut. Robison, both in the field and throughout the operations. I regret to add that Mr. Cocks was seriously wounded during the action in a rencontre with a Sikh horseman. I would also bring to your lordship's notice the name of Lieut. Stannus, of the 5th light cavalry; this officer has commanded the cavalry party attached to my escort throughout the operations to my entire satisfac-tion. He was severely wounded on the 21st, when gallantly charging a party of the enemy's horsemen. Major Anstruther, of the Madras Artillery: Lieut. Mayne, of the Madras Cavalry; and Capt. Showers, of the 14th N.I., attended me in the field.

I have most unwillingly been delayed from sooner forwarding this despatch, from the circumstance of having only this day received Brigadier-Gen. the Hon. H. Dundas's report, and some of the casualty returns have not even yet reached me. As soon as the whole come in, a full amended general return shall be transmitted without loss of time, for your lordship's information.

I have the pleasure to enclose a plan of the battle of Goojerst, also a return of the captured ordnance.

I have, &c., Gough, General, Commander-in-Chief in India.

P.S. The casualty lists having arrived. I have the honour to enclose the return of killed and wounded, which I am sorry to see is so much heavier than I at first anticipated. Several of these were occasioned by accidental explosions of the enemy's tumbrils and magazines after the action.

Gough, General.

THE ARTILLERY.

To Lieut.-Col. P. Grant, C.B., Adjutant-General of the Army Sir,—I have the honour to report, for the information of the Excy. the Right Hon, the Commander-in-Chief, the he Beingal

Artillery of the army of the Punjab were allotted as follows during the action of yesterday:—1st troop, 3rd brigade.—Capt. W. R. Warner. Lieut.-Col. C. Grant, attached to Brig. Lock-W. R. Warner. Lieut.-Col. C. Grant, attached to Brig. Lockwood, cavalry brigade, on the right. 4th troop, 1st brigade.—Capt. M. Mackenzie. 4th troop, 3rd brigade.—Capt. J. Anderson. Major Garbett, with the 1st division of infantry, commanded by Major-Gen. W. S. Whish, C.B. 2nd troop, 2nd brigade.—Major J. Fordyce.—No. 17 light field battery.—Capt. M. Dawes. With the 2nd infantry division, commanded by Major-Gen. Sir W. R. Gilbert, K.C.B.—No. 5 light field battery.—Lieut. Robertson. Major Mouatt, with the 3rd division of infantry under Brig.—Gen. Campbell. C.B. 4th troop. 2nd brigade. under Brig. Gen. Campbell, C.B. 4th troop, 2nd brigade.—
Capt. F. Duncan. 1st troop, 2nd brigade.—Capt. A. Huisb.
With Brig. M. White, cavalry brigade, on the left.—2nd troop, 3rd brigade.—Lieut.-Col. Lane, C.B. 3rd troop, 2nd brigade.
—Capt. R. Kinleside. Lieut.-Col. Brind, composing the reserve under Brig. G. Brooke, C.B.—Four 18-pounders, two 8-inch howitzers, drawn by elephants.—Major Sir R. Shakespear. Two 18-pounders, two 8-inch howitzers, drawn by elephants.—Capt. J. Shakespear. With Major Horsford, commanded by Brig. E. Huthwaite, C.B., two 18-pounders, two 8-inch howitzers. With Capt. E. Masters, two 18-pounders, two 8-inch howitzers. Capt. E. Austin, who, being unable from his wound to accompany his own battery, No. 10 did duty with the heavy guns. With Major E. Day, commanded by Brig. E. Huthwaite, C.B.

These batteries, engaged in action by those attached to the 1st and 2nd divisions, advanced within about 600 yards, and the heavy guns within 800 or 1,000 yards of the enemy's artillery, on which they opened their fire about 9 o'clock, A.M. Shortly after the action commenced, an opportunity was observed of enfilading one of the enemy's batteries, when the reserve artillery, under Lieut.-Col. F. Brind, was advanced and placed by Brigadier G. Brooke, C. B., so as to do so. The batteries of the 3rd division engaged as they came up, and those with the cavalry brigades supported their movements as opportunity offered. Nearly the whole engagement being a cannonade, no movement of importance took place among the batteries, which maintained their fire until half-past 11 A.M., when many of the enemy's guns were observed to be dismounted and their line broken, and an advance was ordered in pursuit.

I have the honour to state, for the Commander-in-Chief's information, my perfect satisfaction with the professional exertions of the officers, and my high approbation of the steady conduct of both officers and men during the day. To Brigadiers Brooke, C. B., and Huthwaite, C. B., in general direction of the horse and foot artillery, respectively, under my orders; Lieut.-Colonels C. Grant and F. Brind, Majors R. Horsford, E. F. Day, and J. L. Mouatt, all of whom held commands, as well as to all the officers commanding troops and batteries above enumerated, I have to acknowledge my best thanks for their exertions, by which these results were obtained. To the divisional staff, Capt. J. Abercrombie, deputy-assist. adj. general, and Lieut. H. Tombs, deputy-assist. qr. master general, and to H. A. Olpherts, my aide de camp, I am much indebted for their exertions; and also to Capt. C. Hogge the commissary, and Lieut. P. Christie, deputy commissary of ordnance, for their excellent arrangement of their department, as well as for their assistance in the field. Brigadiers Brooke and Huthwaite mention their majors of brigade, Lieut. C. V. Cox and Lieut. E. Kaye remajors of origane, Lieur. C. V. Cox and Lieur. E. Raye respectively, as having afforded them able assistance. I have great pleasure, finally, particularly to bring to his Excellency's notice the zeal and attention of Mr. Deputy-Commissary Spencer during the day, and beg to recommend that old and deserving warrant-officer to his kind consideration. I have, &c.

J. TENNANT, Brigadier-General, commanding artillery division, army of the Punjab.

THE ENGINEERS.

To Lieut.-Col. P. Grant, C. B., Adjutant-General of the Army.

Head-quarters, Camp Goojerat, Feb. 26. Sir,—In reference to general orders of the 21st instant, I beg to submit, for the imformation of the Right Hon. the Commander in-Chief, a report on the conduct of the engineer department during the late operations and the engagement of Major Napier, attended by Lieut. Greathed, and Major Tremenhere, attended by Lieut. Glover, were employed on the 21st, the former with the right, the latter with the left column of attack, and were very useful from their previous examination of the ground, and in particular of the position of the nulla on our right flank. Capt. Western, Lieuts. Goodwyn, Crommeline, and Taylor, accompanied me, and to all those officers my acknowledgments are due for conveying communications and obtaining information on every point required during the day. have also the gratification to report to his Excellency the zealous and able manner in which Capt. Cunningham and Lieut. C. Paton performed the duty assigned to them, of bringing up the fleet of boats ordered by his Excellency from Ramnuggur, and placing them so as to enable the portion of the army on the other side of the Chenab to co-operate and to come up. The former officer arrived before the close of the action, joined Brig. Gen. Campbell's division. The other officers of engineers were detached with the different divisions of the army, and no mention of these officers is needed from me, as whatever service they may have had an opportunity of rendering, will be more appropriately reported to his Excellency, or acknowledged by the general officers commanding each division. Capt. Siddons, commanding the sappers and pioneers, was attached to the heavy guns with a portion of his corps, the remainder being detached by companies to the different divisions; such duty as was required from them I need hardly say was effectively performed; and I trust it may not be considered by his lordship out of place my mentioning here the gallant behaviour and unwearied exertion displayed by these men throughout the present service. I allude in particular to the siege operations at Mooltan, and the conduct of that portion of the corps who were employed there.

Prior to the engagement on the 21st instant, the officers of engineers were employed in collecting information, and in surveying and reconnoitring; and it is due to Capt. Longden, of H. M.'s 13th regiment, who is attached to the engineer department as surveyor and field engineer, to state the very sole assistance he has rendered in all these duties during the whole operations since I have joined the army.

I beg to add, that I am much indebted to Lieut. J. H. Maxwell for the very zealous performance of his duties, on all occasions, as major of brigade of engineers, and to Lieut. J. E. Cracroft, brigade quartermaster, my acknowledgments are also due; and I hope I may be permitted to recommend to his Excellency's favour Lieut. Hutchinson, of the engineers, a very promising young officer, who had been lately acting as my aidede-camp, and who was very severely wounded on the 21st inst.

THE CAVALRY.

From Major Gen. Sir J. Thackwell, K.C.B. and K.H., commanding cavalry division, to Lieut.-Col. Grant, C.B., Adjutant-Gen. of the army.

Head-quarters, Camp, Goojerat, Feb. 25. Sir,-I have the honour to report, for the information of his Exc. the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief, the operations of the division of cavalry under my command, in the battle fought on the 21st inst. near the town of Goojerat.

at 7 o'clock in the morning.

The right column, composed of troops named below, tunder the command of Brigs. Hearsey and Lockwood, C.B., were formed in column left in front at the same hour. The 3rd division of infantry and the Bombay brigade, all on the left of the nulla leading towards Goojerat, being under my immediate superintendence, I remained on the left flank of the army, and I make no doubt that Brig.-Gens. Dundas and Campbell have made you fully acquainted with the operations of the troops under their command.

On approaching the village of Nurrawalla, just without the range of the enemy's batteries, the infantry deployed into line, range of the enemy's oatteries, the mainty deproyed into me, and Brig. White formed his cavalry in front of that village, with its left back and parallel to a gentle rising of the ground, on which was posted the enemy's right, consisting of a large body of Affghans and Goorchura horse. From this position a fire of round shot was opened, and the enemy's cavalry extended to the right, so as to threaten to turn our left flank. To oppose the enemy's guns, I ordered Capt. Duncan to move his troop of horse artillery to the front, which he did in good style, and opened his fire within 500 or 600 yards. This movement was followed by the advance of Capt. Huish's troop, and both did considerable execution upon the enemy, but did not prevent the attempt of the Affghans to outflank our left. The Scinde horse were on the left of my line, and I ordered them to advance, with a squadron of the 9th lancers, under Capt. Campbell; a part of the former to be in reserve, and supported by a squadron of the 9th lancers under Major Grant, C.B., in echellon on the right. These troops made a most brilliant charge upon the enemy; at the same time I advanced the guns and cavalry towards the enemy's line. The fire of the guns soon put the Ghoorchurms in retreat, and the glorious charge of the troops on the left caused their whole force to seek safety in retreat by the Burradurree. A gun was captured during these proceedings, but, as we were then considerably in advance of the left of the infantry, although Capt. Duncan was enabled to enfilade a battery opposed to them, and ignorant of the force the enemy might have between the Burradurree and the town-a space covered with trees,-it became necessary to proceed with caution, yet I soon was enabled to open a fire upon the enemy, both on the right and left of the former place, which caused them considerable loss, and hastened their retreat.

Left column.—ist brigade of cavalry, Brig. White, C.B., commanding; H.M.'s 3rd dragoons, Major Yerbury; H.M.'s 9th lancers, Lieut.-Col. Fullerton; 8th light cavalry, Major Mackenzie: Scinde horse. Capt. Malcolm; Capt. Duncan's troop horse artillery. Hight column.—2nd brigade of cavalry, Brig. Lockwood, C.B., commanding; H.M.'s 14th light dragoons, Lieut.-Col. King; 1st light cavalry, Lieut.-Col. Bradford; 2 rissalas, 11th irregular cavalry, Capt. Masters; 2 rissalas, 14th irregular cavalry, Lieut. Robarts; Capt. Warner's troop horse artillery.

4th brigade of cavalry, Brig. Hearsey commanding; 3rd irregular cavalry, Major Tait, C.B.; 9th irregular cavalry, Major Christie. The 5th and 6th light cavalry were left in the rear to protect the baggage.

I may here observe that all the enemy's tents were left standing near the Burradurree, and on the Sikh right of the town, with probably much baggage in them, all of which were probably plundered by the camp followers.

The enemy being now in full retreat, I moved Brig. White's brigade well to the left front, and soon forced the enemy from the Jhelum road, and eventually from that of Beember also, cutting off large oodies of the enemy, much baggage, and many guns, which were secured by this brigade, as well as the troops of the 2nd and 4th brigades, which had been ordered to join in the pursuit. At 20 minutes past 4 r.m., none of the enemy being in sight, and being, as was said by the villagers, nine or ten miles from Goojerat, I discontinued the pursuit and returned to camp at this place. In this pursuit Capts. Duncan and Huish's troops of artillery, latterly joined by Major Leeson and Major Blood's troop of the same arm, brought their guns to bear upon the enemy with good effect on several occasions, and their advance was as rapid as the intersected nature of the ground (by nullas) would admit, and the 9th lancers and 8th light cavalry made gallant attempts to close with the enemy's cavalry, which, however, were frustrated by the rapid retreat of the latter, yet a great number of the enemy were slain by this brigade in the pursuit. I witnessed the activity of Capt. Unett and part of his squadron of the 3rd light dragoons, and Brig. White mentions that the whole of that regiment was actively engaged in this work of retribution.

Being an eye-witness to all the movements of the 1st brigade, I have great satisfaction in stating that Brig. White conducted them very much to my satisfaction. I am also well satisfied with the manner in which Lieut.-Col. Fullerton and Majors Yerbury and Mackenzie commanded their respective regiments, and in which Major Grant supported the charge of cavalry on the left. The charge of the Scinde horse reflects the highest credit on Capt. Malcolm, and I have great pleasure in having witnessed the gallant bearing of all the officers and men of this brigade during the operations of the day; and I feel sure that their only regret was that the enemy's cavalry so often declined To Captains Duncan and Huish, and Majors Leethe attack. son and Blood, I am much indebted for the manner in which they brought their guns into action whenever an opportunity occurred, and the steadiness and good conduct of both officers and men were very conspicuous.

I have now the pleasing duty to state that I have received every assistance and support from my deputy assistant adjutant-general, Capt. Pratt, on the present occasion as well as during the campaign. To my deputy-assist, qu. master-general, Lieut. Tucker, I am greatly indebted for his zeal, activity, intelligence, and successful endeavours to procure intelligence of the movements of the enemy during the operations; he, as well as my aide-de-camp, Lieut. Thackwell, Lieut. Young, of the engineers, Lieut. Carter, of the pioneers; and Cornet Beatson, of the 6th light cavalry, accompanied me during the battle, and afforded me essential service in carrying my orders on various occasions during the operations of the day. Brig. White states how greatly he was satisfied with the conduct of his brigade-major, Capt. Cautley, and the whole of the officers and men of his brigade.

As the operations of the 2nd and 4th brigades of cavalry did not come under my observation, except towards the latter end of the pursuit, I have the honour to forward Brig. Lockwood's report, and it would appear therefrom that he conducted his brigade judiciously; and I am gratified to learn that both officers and men behaved greatly to his satisfaction, and that the 14th light dragoons and 1st light cavalry conducted themselves gallantly, and evinced every anxiety to close with the enemy. I am happy to observe that the brigadier has mentioned with great approbation the conduct of Lieut.-Colonels Bradford and King in command of their regiments; and I cannot avoid here stating, for the information of his lordship, that I observed with much satisfaction the zeal and judgment evinced by both officers when in command of considerable bodies of cavalry detached from the camp at Chillianwallah on important duties.

I regret that I have not yet received any report from Brig. Hearsey, or return of casualties from his brigade, or the Scinde horse; these will be forwarded when they arrive.

I have, &c.,
J. THACKWELL, Major-General,
Commanding Cavalry Division.

Camp, Goojerat, Feb. 22. Sir,-I have the honour to report, for the information of Major-Gen. Sir J. Thackwell, commanding the cavalry division, that on the morning of the 21st I formed my brigade, as directed by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, on the right rear of the first division of infantry, and parallel to Brig. Markham's reserve, advancing in this order until the opened their fire. I then deployed the brigade in the following manner: - In the first line, five troops of H.M.'s 14th light dragoons, two squadrons 1st light cavalry, with the 1st troop 3rd brigade borse artillery, on the left, escorted by a troop of the 14th and a rissalah 11th irregular cavalry. In support the remainder of the 11th irregular cavalry, and in reserve one squadron 14th, and one squadron 1st, light cavalry. In the commencement of the action, I directed Capt. Warner to open his fire upon a large body of the enemy near a village in our front; but, as they returned a heavy fire within accurate range, I changed position left back, and the horse artillery ceased firing. The enemy's horsemen now appeared in great force upon our right, threatening to turn our flank, so I changed front to the right, directing the reserve to retain its front, and communicate with the infantry.

Capt. Warner's guns opened with great effect upon the horsemen and turned them, but they only retired a short distance, and then a regiment of their regular cavalry moved round by a circuitous route and got completely into our rear. I immediately detached towards them three guns, with a squadron of the 14th, who, in conjunction with Major Christie's corps of irregular cavalry, drove them off. About this time a large gol of horse came on towards me, and I prepared to charge, but as they turned at once from the fire of the guns, and as there was a nullah in our front, I refrained from advancing after them. The reserve also now advanced in support of Col. Hervey's brigade of infantry. then received orders from the Commander-in-Chief to bring on the brigade, which I did, and followed in pursuit of the enemy, until I found myself parallel to the cavalry under the majorgeneral, when I placed myself in communication with him. the pursuit the 14th dragoons and 1st light cavalry cut down or shot a considerable number of the Sikh infantry, both regular and irregular, and Corporal Wm. Pain, of the 14th dragoons, captured a red silk standard, killing in single combat the horseman who hore it.

I beg to state to the major-general that I had the greatest satisfaction in witnessing the steadiness of the troops composing the brigade in performing several manœuvres under a heavy fire of artillery. My best thanks are due to Capt. Warner, horse artillery, for the able and efficient manner in which he employed his guns; also to Lieut. Col. Bradford, commanding the 1st light cavalry; Lieut. Col. King, 14th light dragoons; Capt. Masters, 11th irregular cavalry; and Lieut. Roberts, 14th irregular cavalry; and Lieut. Col. Doherty, who commanded the reserve. I am also under the greatest obligations to my brigademajor, Capt. Yule, 9th lancers, for the essential assistance he rendered me, not only during the action, but during the period I have commanded the second brigade.

I have, &c.,
G. H. Lockwoon, Commanding Second Cavalry Brigade.

To Capt. Pratt, Assist.-Adjt.-General, Cavalry Division. Camp, near Khoree, Feb. 23.

Sir, -I have the honour to report to Sir Joseph Thackwell, K.c.a. and K.H., commanding the cavalry division of the army of the Punjah, for the information of his Exc. the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief, that, agreeably to instructions received from Capt. Pratt, assist.adjt.gen., cavalry division, I joined, at about half past eight o'clock of the morning of the 21st instant, the brigade of cavalry on the right, under Brig. Lockwood, with the 3rd and 9th irregular cavalry, and, as senior cavalry officer in the field on that flank, I assumed command of the whole of that arm as detailed below,* and a troop of horse artillery under Capt. Warner. Soon after the action commenced by a cannonading and heavy bodies of horse, amongst them apparently a regular regiment showed in our front. The cavalry under mycommand advanced towards them, and the troop of horse artillery was sent to the front with its support (a squadron of H.M.'s 14th dragoons and a squadron of irregular horse) and opened a well-directed fire of round and shrapnell, which made the enemy fall back to a respectable distance. On this, very numerous bodies of horse went off to our right, apparently with the intention of turning that flank. I manœuvred to the right with the irregular brigade, and kept them in check. About this time I received orders from his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief not to separate the left of the cavalry too far from the columns of infantry advancing in I was therefore necessitated to close to the left, that direction. which I did with Brig. Lockwood's brigade. At the same time, as they again pressed on my right, I ordered three guns to support it—the fire from which again made the enemy draw off. I now observed it was their determination to turn the right, and as I had been joined by Col. Doherty with two squadrons, I placed him to fill the gap on my left, and ordered Brig. Lockwood's brigade and three guns to join the irregulars on that flank. This checked the enemy, but a very large body now advanced on the space on our left. I immediately opposed it with the irregular brigade and Brig. Lockwood's, with a half-battery, and the enemy was again foiled, but they, perceiving I had only the artillery supports and rissalah of horse under the command of Lieut. Roberts on my extreme right, made a last effort to turn it. This was promptly met by the 3rd and 9th irregulars being sent in that direction—the 9th advancing to meet them with the half-battery; thus foiled, they returned to our left; Major Christie followed their movement. This was their last attempt. A troop of horse artillery, with supports of one squadron of the 9th irregulars, commanded by Lieut, and Adj. Tytler, pushed to the front and got under the fire of their artillery, when several men and horses suffered from round shot. It was now apparent from the distance of the sound of their guns that the enemy were in retreat, and Major Mackeson informed me it was his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief's wish that all the cavalry should pursue and prevent the enemy carrying off their guns. I immediately directed Brig. Lockwood's brigade to take a sweep to the right, and pushed on myself with the 3rd irregulars, and Lieut. Robart's rissalah, with Capt. Warner's troop of horse artillery, the 9th irregulars, and 11th, under Capt. Master, following as soon as they could get clear of a deep and quaggy nulla, and we perceived the enemy in full retreat after a canter of four miles. The artillery opened upon the masses of men, whilst the cavalry advanced on the flank, and overtook them near the village of Runnawall, where a great many of the Bunnoo troops were sabred and shot. In this manner the pursuit continued until a deep nulla prevented the horse artillery getting on without delay. Here I left them with two squadrons, and pushed on again, overtaking another body, and punishing them. I detached Capt. Biddulph, with half a rissalah, to ascertain the cause of a heavy cloud of dust on our left. He reported it was Sir J. Thackwell's division, and I soon after heard his battery of horse artillery open. Both divisions of cavalry were now closing on the enemy, and Capt. Biddulph was so fortunate as to capture five guns, and Major Christie another that had been left in a nulla by the retreating foe. (Major Christie informs me that this gun would have been left behind if he had not made great exertions in having it brought into camp. He disclaims the capture of it.—J. B. H.) The pursuit continued to the village of Sainthull, when I met and reported to Sir J. Thackwell, and whence we returned to camp. The distance the cavalry under my command went over in pursuit was 15 miles. We did not get to the camp of the irregulars, near the Burradurree of Goojerat, until 10 o'clock at night, and had thus been 15 hours on horseback.

I have every reason to be pleased with the conduct of all the officers under my command. Some difference arose as to carrying my orders into effect by Brig. Lockwood, in consequence of his receiving direction from supreme authority, of which I was not at the time aware—but I found him most zealous and desirous of having an opportunity to charge the enemy at the head of H.M.'s 14th dragoons. The conduct of that regiment throughout the day was most exemplary and steady, and I have not the least doubt, had an opportunity occurred, it would have been most eagerly seized, to the utter destruction of any body opposed to it. Brig. Lockwood's report will bear testimony to the energy of the officers commanding regiments in his brigade, as I do most assuredly of those officers commanding, and in the regiments of irregular cavalry. My thanks are due to Major Tait, C.B., commanding the 3rd irregulars; Major Christie, commanding the 9th irregulars; Capt. Master, commanding the llth irregulars; and Lieut. Roberts, commanding a rissalah of the 14th irregulars. The conduct of the horse artillery was be-yond all praise, and I feel much indebted to Capt. Warner, his officers, and men, for the able manner in which that noble arm was employed. I feel myself much indebted also to Lieut. Neville Chamberlain, brigade-major of the 4th brigade of irregular cavalry, for his assistance in the field during the forenoon, which I cannot too much appreciate, and for the example he set in several hand to hand affairs with a furious and exasperated enemy during the pursuit. Lieut. Crawford Chamberlain, second in command, 9th irregular horse, although still suffering from his wound, was present with the regiment the whole day, thus showing his usual energy. Lieut. and Adjutant Tytler 9th irregulars, also brought to my notice the steadiness of a squadron of that regiment when under severe artillery fire, by which one sowar was killed and several men and horses wounded.

I shall forward a list of casualties as soon as I can get them from the different officers in command of regiments and parties, but from the constant marching we have had since the battle of Goojerat, and the inclement weather we are now enduring, I have not as yet been able to get them.

I have, &c., J. B. HEARSEY, Brigadier of the 4th Brigade, Commanding Cavalry on the Right Flank of the Army. P.S.—I have just got the return of the casualties of the 3rd and 9th irregular cavalry, which I have the honour to enclose.

THE 1ST INFANTRY DIVISION.

No. 1. To the Adjt .- General of the Army. Camp Goojerat, Feb. 22.

Sir,—I have the honour to report, for the information of the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief, that the 1st infantry division, with horse artillery attached as detailed below (from right to left), marched at about half-past 7 A.M.; yesterday, the 1st brigade, commanded by Brig. Harvey, in quarter distance columns of regiments, right in front at deploying distance, with a troop of native horse artillery in either flank drawn up in corresponding order. 4th troop, 1st brigade horse artillery, Capt. Mackenzie; 1st infantry brigade, 52nd NI., H.M.'s 10th foot, 8th N.I., 4th troop, 3rd brigade horse artillery (Capt. J. Anderson, except two guns at Vizierabad); three companies of pioneers, Lieut, M'Mullen. In reserve.—2nd infantry brigade, 51st N.I., H.M.'s 32nd foot, 72nd N.I.

The 2nd brigade in reserve, commanded by Brig. Markham, and 300 to 400 yards in rear, proceeded in contiguous quarter distance columns.

After advancing about two miles or more, the enemy opened their fire, and after the enemy had made some further progress, both brigades, agreeably to his Lordship's orders (and taken up from the left) deployed, the horse artillery conforming thereto. Immediately afterwards the troops of horse artillery and skirmishers (of the 1st brigade) were ordered to the front, the latter at 300 yards distance. I then requested Brig. Markham to take ground to the left, that the interval made by the advance of Capt. Anderson's four guns might be covered by the 72nd N.I. Both troops began a spirited cannonade, and continued the formular three hours, until the enemy's guns in our front (like those, I believe, in front of every part of the line, through a similar treatment) were silenced. During the cannonade, on first receiving an order for the further advance of both troops, I learned from Major Garbett, who was in command of them, that the guns on our left front had had so many horses killed and disabled that they must await the arrival of others from the rear, which I observed were making quick progress to their troops, and which shortly afterwards, I regret to say, lost its gallant captain, who was instantly wounded by a cannon ball; the duties continued, however, to be sufficiently prosecuted under the superintendence of Lieuts. Francis and Mecham, to the former of whom the command immediately devolved. After this, both troops being well advanced to the front, and the enemy making one or two threatening demonstrations, I thought it right to make a requisition on the cavalry for a small detachment for their protection, which was promptly complied with by Brig. Lockwood. On the advance of the line being directed, the right brigade found the enemy's infantry in great force in its front, with a strong body of cavalry on their left, which rendered it necessary for Brig. Hervey to make a short Sank movement to the right, and throw back the 52nd No. 1, in order to counteract any attack the enemy might have in contemplation. As this unavoidably caused a great gap in the line, I thought it advisable to direct Brig. Markham at once to occupy it by his brigade, which was accordingly done, and the arrangement immediately reported to his Excellency. The enemy were otherwise preparing to take advantage of this opening, but on seeing the 2nd brigade advancing to it, halted, and gave a few rounds of grape and matchlock fire, which was returned with full effect by file firing from the right of divisions and Lieut. Francis's guns, which latter were being replenished with ammunition, and for the moment in the rear of the infantry. Lieut. Need, aide-de-camp, on noticing the enemy's cavalry and infantry immediately in front of the 2nd brigade, had made known the same to Lieuts. Francis and Mecham, who, on his suggestion, instantly galloped to the front through an interval made for the purpose by H.M.'s 32nd regiment, and with a few rounds of grape co-operated with the infantry (who were advancing to charge) in sending back the enemy in great confusion.

In the flank movement by the 1st brigade already adverted to, and which, under a heavy fire from the enemy of round grape and matchlock, with the reformation to line (in discovering that the enemy did not make the anticipated attack) was effected in the most steady and orderly manner, Capt. Mackenzie, by his able and judicious co-operations, made his troops particularly useful; and on the enemy's declining to receive the charge of H. M. 's 10th and the 8th and 52nd N. I., poured in such a continued fire of shrapnel and round shot upon their retiring masses as, with what had occurred from the 2nd brigade, effectually to prevent any further threat or molestation to the division under my command, and, as far as I could observe, every part of the line had been equally successful in defeating the purposes of the enemy, who long before noon must have discovered that the entire loss of their guns, ammunition, camp equipage, and cattle, was inevitable.

On reaching Goojerat, the 2nd brigade, agreeably to his lordship's orders, commenced collecting the enemy's abandoned guns, 19 of which were sent in by them forthwith, and occupied the town with the following details under Major Case, H. M.'s 32nd regiment, which was afterwards reinforced by the 36th regiment (N. I.); two companies of H. M.'s 32nd regiment, under Capt. Pigott; two companies of the 51st regiment N. I., under Lieut. Wallace. Possession of the eight gates was first taken, and then of the fort, where about 80 of the enemy laid down their arms, and were made over as prisoners to the 36th regiment N. I., with other small parties found in different parts of the town, that, with few exceptions, made no resistance. The above four companies captured a gun, standard, and some horses, with the loss of one man killed of H. M.'s 32nd, and an officer of the same corps wounded, Lieut. Jeffrey. The lat brigade on halting here detached a subdivision of H. M.'s 10th regiment, and the grenadier company of the 52nd N. I., to expel a party of 200 of the enemy in occupation of the temple and garden, in rear of which the 8th regiment N. I. is now encamped, which was effected with trifling loss on our side, but the enemy had 30 or 40 killed and wounded, and a great number taken prisoners.

It is particularly satisfactory to me to bring to the favourable notice of the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief the conduct of the division under my command during the services of yesterday, performed under his lordship's immediate orders and direction, and consisting of, in fact, the horse artillery and infantry of the (Bengal) Mooltan field force, with the exception of the 49th N. I. on detached duty. Brigadiers Hervey and Markham conducted their brigades under the various circumstances of the day (some of which I have briefly specified) in a manner that merits the strongest commendation, and they were, as heretofore, admirably supported by the officers in command of regiments, viz.:—Lieut. Col. Franks, C.B., H.M.'s 10th regiment; Lieut. Col. Brooke, H. M.'s 32nd regiment; Major Farquharson, 8th N.I., and, on his being severely wounded, Brevet-Major Williams; Brevet-Major Griffin, 51st N.I.; Capt. Jamieson, 52nd N.I.; Capt. Lloyd, 72nd N.I. I cordially unite with both brigadiers in the expression of thanks to the above officers for the intelligence and zeal with which they carried out their orders, and to all the officers and men under their command for the steadiness and prompt obedience so uniformly evinced throughout the division. Brigadier Hervey acknowledges the services of his brigade-major, Capt. Wiggins, in high terms of commendation, and the active assistance he received throughout the day from Lieut. B. Reid (34th N.I.), interpreter to H. M.'s 10th regiment; as does Brig. Markham those of his brigade-major, Capt. Balfour, H.M.'s 32nd regiment (who has happily recovered from the wound he received in the action of the 12th of September last), and of Ensign Fraser, 23rd regiment, appointed acting interpreter of the 49th N.I., who is waiting the arrival of this regiment from Mooltan, who gladly made his services useful to the brigadier. To Major Garbett, commanding the horse artillery, attached to my division, my best acknowledgments are due for his unremitting attention to both troops under his command, and particularly in matters the officers commanding them were not so able of themselves to give directions about. He mentions in the highest terms (as does Brig. Hervey) Capt. M'Kenzie and his troop, and notices that after the lamented death of Capt. G. Anderson, the four guns of his troop were well commanded by Lieut. Francis; and I heartily concur in the testimody he bears to the admirable conduct of the officers and men of both troops, who worked their guns with a rapidity and precision that would have been impracticable except from their uniform coolness and steadiness under a heavy fire from the enemy at both positions, first, at 1,000 yards, and secondly, at 500 yards. Major Garbett also notices in most favourable terms the able assistance rendered him by Lieut. De Tissier, acting adjutant 1st brigade horse artillery. Lieut. M'Mullin and his com-pany of pioneers deserve much credit, having continued with the 4th troop 1st brigade horse artillery, and rendered useful service whenever called upon.

Having but recently had my attention drawn to the circumstances I am about to mention, I think, in justice to the gallant officer affected by them, I may be permitted so to do, though they refer to anterior conflicts with the enemy. On the 12th of September last, after Lieut. Col. Pattoun was mortally wounded, the command of the six companies of H.M.'s 32nd regiment devolved on Major Inglis, and through the exertions of the gallan; troops employed, the enemy's strong position was carried; and a similar result occurred on the 7th of November last, when, from Lieut.-Col. Brookes having the command of one of the two columns of attack, that of H. M.'s 32nd regiment again devolved on Major Inglis, whose conduct in that important trustwas highly satisfactory to the brigadier commanding; and I have accordingly great satisfaction in soliciting the favourable notice of his Excellency to the same. Major Napier (attended by Lieut. Greathed) of the engineers, who was attached for the day to the two divisions on the right, aided me much by occasionally reconnoitring positions we were approaching, and in giving me the advantage of his reconnoissance of the preceding day. Capt. Glasfurd and Lieut. J. B. Smith, of the engineers, having been directed to join me, were extremely useful during the day; and I feel much indebted to both, as also to Capt. Cheape (51st N.I.), late treasurer to the Mooltan field force, who attended me throughout, and for whom it was not difficult to find frequent and active employment. Major Becher, assist. qr.master general, and Capt. Whish, dep. assist. adj. general of the division, as also my aides-de-camps Capt. J. C. Kennedy, H. M.'s 18th foot, and Lieut. A. Need, H.'M.'s 14th light dragoons, afforded me every assistance, and are entitled to my best thanks for their attention and zeal. The horse of the dep. assist. adj. general, from which he had just dismounted, having in the commencement of our cannonade been severely wounded by a cannon shot, it was some time before another could join from the rear, and intermediately a camel served him as a tolerable substitute.

I beg respectfully, in conclusion, to offer to the Right. Honthe Commander-in-Chief my hearty congratulations on the complete success of his lordship's arrangements for the day, and onan issue which, under Divine Providence, has been permitted to be most triumphant.

I have, &c.,

W. S. Whish, Major-General, commanding 1st Infantry Division, Army of the Punjab.

THE SECOND INFANTRY DIVISION.

To Lieut.-Col. P. Grant, c.B., Adj.-General of the Army. Sir, —I have to apologise for the delay which has taken place in complying with general orders of the 21st inst., directing reports of the proceedings of the troops employed against the enemy to be forwarded for the information of his Exc. the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief; but having been, as you are aware, constantly on the move since the morning after the action near Goojerat, in pursuit of the fugitive Sikh army, I have not had an opportunity of doing so.

I have now to report, for the information of his lordship, that the 2nd infantry division, consisting of the third brigade 31st N.I., 2nd European regt., 70th N.I., 4th brigade 30th N.I., H.M.'s 29th Foot, and 56th N.I., advanced from Shadawalla on the morning of the 21st inst., in line of quarter distance columns, at deploying distance, leaving a battery of heavy guns under Maj. Horsford, of the artillery, between the two brigades; No.17 light field battery, under con.mand of Capt. Dawes, and Brevet

Major Fordyce's troop of horse artillery between the right regiments of the left and right brigades respectively. Having received orders to push forward my light troops to force the enemy to show their position, I immediately advanced the troop of horse artillery and Dawes' light field battery, which instantly drew a very heavy and well-directed fire from two large batteries, which the enemy had established on either side of the village of Kalerah, by which they were nearly screened from the fire of our guns, which, with the light companies, were then still further pushed forward, followed by the division, which had deployed into line; the heavy guns in our centre at this time opening a very destructive cannonade. Up to this time the village above-named seemed to be unoccupied, and I directed a party of infantry to take possession of it. Upon the approach of this party a tremendous fire of musketry was opened from the walls, which were loopholed in every direction; the 2nd European regiment was then ordered up in support, under the command of Major Steel, and soon carried it after a most obstinate resistance, in which that gallant regiment suffered rather severely, as well as upon its emerging from the village; soon after which the enemy left many of their guns and fled in the greatest confusion.

It affords me the highest satisfaction to record the valuable services of Brig. A. S. H. Mountain, C.B., and of Brig. A. Penny, C.B., who led the second European regiment to the attack of the village in the most gallant and exemplary manner. I should wish particularly to mention the very great assistance I received from Major Horsford, commanding the heavy battery, and Major Fordyce, commanding the 2nd troop 2nd brigade horse artillery, and Capt. Dawes, commanding No. 17 light field battery. It is impossible to praise too highly their conduct, and that of all those under their command. I beg likewsie to bring to his Excellency's notice the valuable assistance I received from my divisional and personal staff; Brevet-Capt. J. A. D. Ferguson, deputy-assist. adj.-gen.; Lieut. A. S. Galloway, deputy-assit. qr. master general; Lieut. Cot, aid-e-camp; Capt. Sherwill and Lieut. M'Donnell, majors of brigade; and Capt. Goldie and Lieut. Irwin, of the engineers. Capt. W. P. Robbins, 15th N.I., who acted as my aide-de-camp during the action, afforded me great and active assistance, as did also Lieut. H. B. Hopper, 31st N.I. (orderly officer). My warmest thanks are due to Lieut.-Col. Congreve, C.B., H.M.'s 29th foot; Lieut.-Col. Jack, 30th N.I., and Lieut.-Col. Holmes, 56th N.I.; and to Majors J. Steel, 2nd European regiment, W. R. Corfield, 31st N.I., and J. R. M'Causland, 70th N.I. (severely wounded in the attack on the village of Kalerah), for the exemplary manner in which they led their regiments. I trust I may be permitted to bring to his Excellency's notice the name of Brevet-Capt. G. Gordon, 50th N.I., officiating sub-assistcommissary-gen., who, at my request, destroyed the enemy's camp equipage and loose amunition. The conduct of the troops under my command, European and native, under a terrific and welldirected cannonade, was such as to call forth my highest com-

In conclusion, I regret that in consequence of our being so constantly on the move since the action, I am unable to forward herein the returns of casualties, but I shall do myself the honour to transmit them with the least possible delay.

I have, &c., W. R. Gilbert, Major-General Commanding

2nd Infantry Dixision, Army of the Punjab.

P.S. – In the absence of the regular returns, I may here add that the amount of loss is very trifling, considering the heavy fire kept up by the enemy's artillery on the centre of the division, where the heavy guns were; the 2nd European regiment having only lost 8 men killed, and 135 wounded; the 31st N.1., 11 men killed, and 131 wounded; and 70th N.I., 10 killed and 40 wounded. In the 4th brigade, H. M.'s 29th regiment lost only two men and six wounded; the 30th N.I., three men wounded; and the 56th N.I., only one man wounded.

THE THIED INFANTRY DIVISION.
To Lieut.-Col. Grant, C.B., Adj.-General of the Army.
Camp, Dowlutnuggur, Feb. 23.

Sir,—I have the honour to report to you, for the information of the Right Hon, the Commander-in-Chief, that, in obedience to the orders I received from his lordship at daylight of the 21st instant, I formed the brigades of the 3rd division, commanded by Brigadiers Carnegy and M'Leod, with the light field batteries attached to them, close to the left bank of the nullah, which passed in front of the village of Shadiwall a little after 7 A.M. The brigade under Brig. Hoggan was formed at the same time in rear, to act as a reserve to the whole force intended to be employed on that side the nullah.

In the advance to the attack of the enemy's position, his lordship desired me to keep close to the left side of the nullah, and to preserve my communication with the heavy guns, which were placed on the opposite bank. His lordship further directed me to approach, but not to pass, that part of the nullah bebind which the right of the enemy's army was formed, without further instructions from him.

With a view to the effectual fulfilment of his lordship's wishes to maintain close communication with the heavy guns on my right, and to prevent their molestation by the enemy from the nullah, I directed the light company of H. M.'s 24th to eccupy and move along the nullah, in advance of the heavy guns; and to render the communication more secure, I supported this com-pany with two guns from No. 10 light field battery, which moved close along the bank of the nullah. The two brigades were formed in the first instance in contiguous columns of regiments (the brigade at full distance), covered by a strong line of skirmishers, and these immediately supported by Nos. 5 and 10 light field batteries attached to them respectively. These skirmishers communicated on the left with those covering the front of the Bombay division, which were likewise supported by the troop of horse artillery belonging to that force. The whole line moved horse artillery belonging to that force. forward at a quarter before eight A.M. in this order, with the regularity of troops at a review. The country we passed over in our advance was perfectly level, highly cultivated, and without an obstruction, being merely dotted here and there with an occasional tree. At balf-past nine the skirmishers having arrived within long range of the enemy's guns, the columns were deployed into line, when we again moved forward. At this moment the right wing of the enemy's army was plainly seen, formed directly in our front beyond a turn in the nullah. which seemed to run parallel to the front of their position, in the centre of which, and nearly opposite to Nos. 5 and 10 light field batteries, they had two very heavy guns, and several six and nine pounders field guns, which then opened fire; that from the former in the first instance caused some less in the batteries; and here it was, I regret to say, that Lieut. Day, of the artillery, a very brave and most promising young officer, was killed by a cannon ball. The line moved onwards to the front, keeping in communication with, and as much as possible in the alignment of the heavy guns, while the field batteries kept up so destructive a fire upon the enemy is their front, in positions behind the nullsh, that they finally obliged the whole force to abandon it, and take shelter under cover of the bank of the nullah, from which they were afterwards driven in confusion and flight by an enfilading fire from these same field batteries. About threequarters of an hour before the enemy had been finally driven in flight from the nullah and from the field, a great effort was made by many, apparently of the principal chiefs, to bring forward a large body of their cavalry, which was followed in a tumultnous manner by the infantry which had taken shelter in the nullah, to attack the centre of the Bombay division. This attack was taken in flank by No. 5 field battery, which caused great loss to the enemy, both in his short advance and subsequent retreat. The infantry of the 3rd division had not occasion to fire a shot. The enemy were driven from their different positions and from the field by the fire these two field batteries, aided by that of the Bombay troop of horse artillery.

I cannot find language to express my sense of the calm, steady, and admirable manner in which these two batteries were commanded and worked by Major Mouatt, the commanding officer, and by Major Ludlow and Lieut. Robertson, the former commanding No. 5, the latter No. 10, battery; nor am I able adequately to express my admiration of the bravery and gallantry of the other officers of these batteries, and of their non-commissioned officers and men, all of whom I beg to recommend, in an especial manner, to the favourable notice of the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief.

After the troops had crossed the nulla I received his lond-ship's orders to follow the troops of the right wing in their movement towards the east side of Goojerat, while the Bombay division passed the town on the other side. After clearing the town the division again resumed its communication with the Bombay troops, and proceeded with them in advance, together with the troops of the 2nd division on our right, until ordered to halt and encamp.

I beg leave to bring to the favourable notice of the Commander-in-Chief the conductof Brigadiers Carnegie and M'Leod, to whom I feel much indebted for the brave example they set their men, and for the officer-like manner in which they managed their respective brigades during the day. Brig. Hoggan, commanding the reserve, was under the immediate orders of Brigadier-General Dundas on the left. The two former brigadiers speak in strong terms of the merits and services during the day of their respective brigade-majors, Capt. Clerk, of the 25th N.I., and Capt. Keiller, of the 6th N.I.; and I can confirm their opinion of the zeal, activity, and value of these officers' services from my own personal observation

I beg also to recommend to the favourable notice of the Commander-in-Chief the conduct of the several officers commanding regiments, who all set an example of the greatest gallantry to their respective corps, viz.—Lieut.-Col. Smith, H. M.'s 24th regiment; Lieut.-Col. Corbet, 25th N.I.; Lieut.-Col. Jones, H.M.'s 61st; Major Tudor, 46th N.I.; and Capt. Lang, 35th N.I. They are all truly deserving of his lordship's favourable notice and approbation. Lieut.-Col. Jones, of H.M.'s from the two majors of that regiment, Major Campbell and Major Stephens; and Lieut.-Col. Smith, of H.M.'s 24th regiment, in a similar manner notices the conduct of Major Blachford, of that corps. I received during the day the most cordial and valuable assistance from Major Ponsonby, assistant-adjutant-general of the division, with whom I have found a real pleasure in being associated on service, and to whom I owe great obligation for the able and careful manner in which he conducts the duties of his department. I beg to recommend to the particular notice of his lordship the Commander-in-Chief the conduct of Ensign Garden, deputy-assis. quar. master general, to whom I am also under many obligations for the zeal and ability with which he performs his various duties. Capt. Durand and Lieut. Morton, of the engineers, were attached to the 3rd division during the action, and accompanied me during the day. They rendered me valuable assistance, and I owe to them, accordingly, my warmest acknowledgments. I cannot conclude this report without also bringing to the notice of the Com-mander-in-Chief the willing and valuable assistance afforded me by my aide-de-camp, Capt. Haythorne, and also by my brother officer, Lieut. Shadwell, of H.M.'s 98th retiment, who was present in the action as a volunteer.

I beg herewith to enclose a return of the killed and wounded, together with a present state of the troops actually engaged, and returns of the quantity of ammunition expended.

I have, &c.,
C. CAMPBELL, Brigadier-General,
Commanding 3rd Division, Army of the Punjab.

THE BOMBAY COLUMN.

From Brig. H. Dundas, C.B., commanding Bombay Column, Army of the Punjab, to the Adj.-General of the Bengal Army, Head-Quarters.

Camp, Saikerwalla, Feb. 22.

-I have the honour to inform you that, agreeably to the orders I received, the Bombay infantry division was formed on the left of the line. I advanced for some distance in contiguous columns at quarter distance, the 60th Rifles, under Lieut .- Col. Bradshaw, and 3rd troop horse artillery, under Major Blood, being thrown in advance. The division deployed into line, and gradually advanced as the attack on the right developed itself. A party of the enemy's horse made a demonstration of attacking the line, but speedily moved off to their own right on receiving one or two rounds from Major Blood's troop. A battery of the enemy, which was in front of the Bengal division, was also quickly silenced by the troop, which made excellent practice.

The division kept gradually advancing without firing a shot, the enemy moving off so fast we could not reach him, the artillery taking every advantage of opening its fire that was afforded. The infantry kept constantly advancing, passing through the enemy's camp, which was left standing, and round the town of Goojerat The ground at the on the left, bringing up the left shoulders. first was studded with bushes and hedges of prickly pear, which caused some delay in getting through, and on reaching the open country again not a sign of the enemy was to be seen. Two guns were abandoned by him on the side of the town. Not a casualty occurred in the infantry division or in the troop, with the exception of two horses. The troop afterwards accompanied Major-Gen. Sir Joseph Thackwell's division of cavalry in pursuit of the enemy, and it has been reported to me by Brig. Leeson, commanding Bombay artillery, that it rendered good service. The Scinde horse, under Lieut. Malcolm, having been attached for the day to Major-Gen. Sir J. Thackwell's division, I had not an opportunity of witnessing a most successful and gallant charge which was made by that distinguished regiment against a party of the enemy's horse which was completely overthrown, with the loss of their standards, and the attempt to turn our left, which the enemy showed a disposition to try, alto-gether frustrated. This success was not gained without some loss, which amounted to three killed and sixteen or seven-teen wounded. The field battery under Capt. Turnbull was attached to the force protecting the baggage, where the troops never came in contact with the enemy, who moved off with the utmost rapidity. There is little room for remark on their conduct, beyond making a steady and regular advance and for a long distance, and preserving a good order of formation. I had every reason to be satisfied with the conduct of all, and my thanks are due to Brig. Capon, commanding the 1st infantry brigade; to Lieut.-Col. Bradshaw, commanding 60th rifles; Major Hallett, commanding 3rd N.I.; Major Mignon, commanding 1st Bombay fusileers; Major Mant, commanding 19th N.I.; Brigadier Leeson, commanding the artillery, rendering every assistance; and Major Blood, in command of the troop, is entitled to every credit for the efficient service the troop was enabled to perform. The steady and good order in which the brigade of the Bengal army moved under Brigadier Hoggan, which was in support of the Bombay division, was very praiseworthy. I am indebted to the officers of the divisional staff for the active assistance they afforded me. Major Green, assist.adj.-general; Capt. Hart, deputy assist .- adj.-general; Capt. Ramsay, the assist, qr.-master-general; Capt. Skinner, the deputy judge advocate-general; Major St. John, paymastergeneral; Lieut. Mules, the 1st fusiliers; Postmaster Lieut. Ward, 60th rifles, my aid-de-camp; and Lieut. Crawley, 15th hussars, aid-de-camp to Maj.-Gen. Aitchison, commanding Mysore division, who officiated as my aid-de-camp; Lieut. Stevenson, brigadier major of artillery, rendered every assistance in his department. The sappers and miners, under Lieut. Kendal, were kept prepared for any duty that might have been required in sloping down nullahs for the guns, &c., but the ground was so favourable for the movement of the troops, that their exertions were not required in this duty. My thanks are also due to Capt. Threshie, assist. commissiary-general, on this occasion, as also for the efficient manner in which the duties of his department have been conducted. Lieut. Henry, 19th N.I., aide-de-camp to the right Hon. the Governor of Bombay, and who was placed in political charge of the prisoner of war, the Dewan Moolraj, joined me in the afternoon, having ridden post from Lahore on purpose to be present, after delivering over charge of his prisoner on the 20th instant.

Herewith I enclose a list of casualties, which is principally in horses, together with a return of ammunition expended.

I have the honour, &c.

H. Dundas, Brigadier-General, Commmanding Bombay Column, Army of the Punjab.

Camp, Goojerat, Feb. 22.

Sir,—In compliance with your order, I have the honour to report that the 3rd, or Major Blood's, troop of horse artillery, was ordered to accompany the cavalry division under General Sir Joseph Thackwell, K.C.B., at about half-past one o'clock yesterday, to follow the enemy, who were then retreating. With this troop I proceeded, accompanied by Lieut. Hamilton and my staff.

After proceeding at a trot and gallop for about nine miles, we joined the cavalry division and soon joined the enemy's rear, and at a distance of about 400 yards opened fire with manifest good effect; they were then attempting to carry off three guns, and a considerable body of cavalry were hovering round to afford them protection. This they were unable to effect, as our well-directed fire soon obliged the enemy to abandon their guns, camels, carts, bullocks, &c., and a great proportion of their baggage, which fell into our hands. The enemy still continuing to retreat in a most disorderly manner, we advanced at a gallop for about three miles, and again opened fire with such effect that they were compelled to abandon another gun. We again advanced some distance further, and were halted by order of the general commanding, who proceeded, and at a quarter to five F.M. we began to fall back towards camp, which we reached at half-past eight o'clock F.M.

I have, &c.,

GENERAL ORDER BY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA.

FOREIGN DEPARTMENT Camp, Ferozepore, March I, 1849.—The Governor General having received, from his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief, a despatch, reporting the details of the brilliant victory which was gained by the British army at Goojerat, on the 21st ultimo, directs that it be published for the information of the army, and of the people of India.

The Sikh army, under the command of Sirdar Chuttur Sing and of Raja Shere Sing, combined with the Affghan troops in the service of the ameer of Cabul, were posted in great strength near to the town of Goojerat. Their numbers were estimated at 60,000 men, and 59 guns were brought by them into action. On the morning of the 21st they were attacked by the forces under the personal command of his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief. A powerful and sustained cannonade by the British artillery compelled them, after some time, to retire from the positions they had well and resolutely maintained. The subsequent advance of the British army drove them back at once from every point; and retreat having been speedily converted into rout, they fled in the utmost disorder; and abandoning their guns and throwing away their arms, were pursued by the artillery and cavalry till the evening for many miles beyond the town. Fifty-three pieces of the enemy's artillery, his camp, his baggage, his magazines, and vast store of ammunition, left in the hands of the British troops, bear testimony to the completeness and to the importance of the victory that has been won.

The Governor-General, in the name and on behalf of the Government of India, most cordially congratulates his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and the whole army, on the glorious success which, under the blessing of Divine Providence, their skill and gallantry have achieved, and he offers to his Excellency, to the generals, the officers, non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the force, his grateful acknowledgments of the service they have thus rendered to the Government and to their country.

The Governor-General begs especially to thank Major-Gen. Sir Joseph Thackwell, K.C.B. and K.H., Major-Gen. Sir W. Gilbert, K.C.B., Major-Gen. Whish, C.B., Brig.-Gen. Campbell. C.B., and Brig.-Gen. the Hon. H. Dundas, C.B., for the ability and judgment with which they directed the operations of the divisions respectively under their command. To the chief the divisions respectively under their command. To the chief engineer, Brig. Cheape, C.B.; to the officers commanding brigades, Brig. Brooke, C.B., Brig. Huthwaite, C.B., and Brig. Leeson; to Brig. White, C.B., Brig. Hearsey, and Brig. Lockwood, C.B.; to Brig. Hervey and Brig. Markham; to Brig. Mountain, C.B., Brig. Penny, C.B., Brig. Capon and Brig. Hoggan; Brig. Carnegy and Brig. M'Leod, the best thanks of the Governor-General are due. The services of Brig.-Gen. the Governor-General are due. The services of Brig. Gen. Tennant and of the artillery of the force have been recorded in the despatch of the Commander-in-Chief, in terms of which they may justly be proud. The Governor-General cordially joins with his Excellency in acknowledging their merit, and in bestowing upon them the praise they have earned so well.

To Major Lugard, to Lieut.-Col. Gough, C.B., and to the officers of the general staff of her Majesty's army; to Lieut.-Col. Grant, C.B.; to Lieut, Col. Garden, C.B., and to the officers of the general staff of the army; to Capt. Ramsay and the officers of the commissariat department; to Mr. Franklin, inspector-general of her Majesty's hospitals; to Dr. Renny and the officers of the medical department, and to the officers of his Exc.'s personal staff, the Governor-General offers his best thanks, and assures them of his full appreciation of their ser-

And to all the troops of every arm, European and native, the Governor-General desires to convey his entire approbation of their steady and gallant conduct throughout the day, particularly to a portion of the 9th lancers and the Scinde horse for their charge against the Affghan cavalry; to the 3rd brigade of infantry, under Brig. Penny, C.B., for their attack on the village of Kalra; and to a portion of Brig. Hervey's brigade for their charge led by Lieut.-Col. Franks, C.B., all of which have been specially reported by his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief.

Thu Governor-General estimates highly the important results which the battle gained on the 21st ultimo is calculated to produce. He entertains a hope that the conviction which the events of that day must force upon all of the vast superiority which the British army derived from the possession of science and military resource, will induce the enemy shortly to abandon a contest which is a hopeless one.

The war in which we are engaged must be prosecuted with vigour and determination, to the entire defeat and dispersion of all who are in arms against us, whether Sikhs or Affghans.

The Governor-General has ever felt and feels unbounded confidence in the army which serves in India. He relies fully on the conviction that their services will be given cheerfully and gallantly as heretofore, whatever may be the obstacles opposed to them: and he does not doubt that, with the blessing of Heaven, such full success will continue to follow their efforts as shall speedily give to the Government of India the victory over its enemies, and restore the country to the enjoyment of

The Governor-General will not fail earnestly to commend the past services of this army to the favourable consideration of her Majesty's Government and of the Hon. East-India Company.

A salute of twenty-four guns has been ordered at every prin-cipal station of the army in India. Head-Quarters, Goojerat, Feb. 22, 1849.—Extract from General order.—The Right Hon. the Governor-General of India having instructed the Commander-in-Chief to detach a force across the Jbelum on special service, his Excellency the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to appoint Major-Gen. THE MAIL, with letters from London to January 24, reached Calcutta March 7.

ESTATE OF PALMER AND Co. - The 12th dividend at the rate of Co.'s As. 14 per sicca rupees 100, is now in course of payment at the office of the official assignee.

AT THE OFICE SALE, held February 19, Behar averaged 937-14-2 rupees, and Benares 943-11-6 rupees, per chest.

LETTERS FROM MOVI.TAN state that the search for treasure has been far more successful than was anticipated, and that much more was expected to be found.

JOHN COCHRANE, Esq., barrister, was appointed official assignee, in succession to the late Mr. Gordon, on the 22nd Feb.
THE FANCY BALL, given to Sir Herbert Maddock prior to his departure from India, came off at the Town Hall on the evening of March 6, and was very numerously attended.

SIR HERBERT MADDOCK having resigned the office of Deputy-Governor of Bengal into the able hands of Sir J. H. Littler, a plain and fancy dress ball and supper at the Town Hall testified the esteem of the Anglo-Indian community of Calcutta for the public and private virtues of Sir Herbert.

MR. WILLIAM LIMOND, long the secretary to the Chamber of Commerce, is succeeded by Mr. James Norman, late of the firm of Gisborne and Co.

THE UNION BANK committee has declared another dividend of 25 per cent. "This dividend," it is stated, "will be calculated on the balance of each claim, i.e. on the amount of the claims as originally registered, less the former dividend and any other part payments which may have been made. This mode of calculation is adopted because the scheme of liquidation expressly provides for it, and it is moreover the fairest towards the general body of creditors, as particular claims have been in part adjusted independently of the dividend."

THE 14TH DRAGOONS. - A "Non-commissioned Officer' gives the following account of the conduct of the 14th Dragoons, in the "battle of the jungles," in reply to what he calls the "calumny" of "A Soldier" in the Delhi Gazette:—" On the 13th January, at about 2 r.m., the 9th Royal Lancers, the 1st and 6th Light Cavalry, and the 14th Dragoons (which latter corps was removed from the 1st brigade for the day, unluckily), were formed up together in the jungle, in a long line of two deep, in front of a number of guns, which were unknown by any officer or man to be in rear, as the bushes were too high to see them even on horseback, and which artillery, I suppose, might have shot us all, without the gunners seeing us or knowing anything about it. This was really and truly the Brigadier's disposition of his cavalry on the day in question. I will swear that no order was ever given to charge, nor could we have done so effectually, as the jungle would of course have broken us, and prevented our galloping in line where a section of threes could scarcely pass. A few of the enemy's horsemen appeared among the bushes, perhaps fifty or sixty, when retirement was com-manded, and the word given to the line of cavalry was 'threes We had been previously faced about all sorts of ways, and dodged about in all manner of directions, and when I heard the order, I thought at first it was a military manœuvre of the Brigadier's. We were 'all among the bushes' when the line went 'threes about' as ordered, and on looking, I saw the next moment that the light cavalry had been apparently shoved out of it, by pressure from the flanks upon the centre, and when we came to the guns in the jungle, the lancers, light cavalry, and dragoons were all mixed up together by the impeding artillery and trees, and which confusion was created by the improper word of command having been given to the line for retirement. I am told the retirement was ordered to move us out of the way of the guns, and to allow them to open: but may I be allowed to ask the reason we were ever placed in front of them? In the midst of the confusion into which we were thrown, the enemy advanced, when our regimental officers immediately commanded their trumpeters to sound the halt. The 14th Dragoons, with their officers, every one of them, excepting Mr. Cureton, who was killed, rallied within 600 yards of their first position, and was ready to charge by themselves, as they did at Ramnuggur, under their own regimental officers, if Lord Gough had permitted them; and the regiment, which was the first to halt, would have halted sooner, but in the confusion no one knew where to assemble, as neither a support nor reserve had been provided by the Brigadier to rally upon, although it is distinctly laid down that there should be in her Majesty's Regulations for the movements of her cavalry."

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

H. M. SERVICE.

Fort William, Feb. 21, 1849.- The Hon. the President of the Council of India in Council is pleased to direct that the following shall be substituted for the last paragraph of General Orders by the Governor General in Council, No. 386, dated the 17th December, 1817.

"Under no circumstances can any officer of her Majesty's service, belonging to a corps serving in India, promoted into, or removed to, one not actually on the strength of the Indian establishment, be permitted to receive Indian allowances when appointed, to suit his own convenience, to remain with his former regiment, or to do duty with another corps.'

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE BISHOP OF CALCUTTA.—We take the following from the Athenaum of Feb. 24:—" A salute of seventeen guns from the saluting battery announced the departure of the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Calcutta, who embarked from the Custom-house yesterday morning for Calcutta, accompanied by the archdeacon, the master attendant, Rev. A R. Symonds, and the domestic chaplain, on board the Hon Company's brig Tavoy. The vessel gotunder weigh immediately on his lordship's arrival. Several of the clergy and gentry were present on the beach to witness his lordship's departure."

OCCURRENCE IN THE INSOLVENT COURT. - The Spectator relates the following singular occurrence which took place lately in the Insolvent Court, when an officer of the Madras army applied for the benefit of the Act:—" Among the debts put down in his schedule, was one for a large amount, on account of a verdict against him in the Supreme Court, several years ago, in an action brought by a husband whose rights he had invaded. Now, it so happens, that there is a clause in the New Insolvent Act, which awards two years' imprisonment to any party taking advantage of it, for a debt of the above peculiar description; provided he is opposed on the score of it, which was the case in the present instance. The learned judge had therefore no alternative, but to pass sentence accordingly, and he did so. Just afterwards, however, the officer obnoxious to its execution, who appears not to have been in the custody of any person, withdrew quietly from the court, leaving its functionaries in great amazement, and has not since been heard of !"

MR. D. BREMNER, the deputy manager of the Oriental Bank, has been appointed to the control of that branch of the institution established at Madras.

THE 51st N.I. have received orders to hold themselves in readiness to embark for the Straits on or about the 20th instant. Athenæum, March 15.

THE 6TH N.I. arrived at Dharwar on the 3rd March.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAIL, by the Ajdaha, with letters from London to Feb. 7, reached Bombay March 8.

THE RIGHT HON. THE GOVERNOR, and his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, with their respective staffs, were expected to leave the presidency for the Mababuleshwur Hills about the 24th March.

H. M.'s 44-GUN FRIGATE CAMBRIAN, bearing the broad pennant of Commodore Plumridge, anchored in the harbour on Sunday evening. The gallant vessel was saluted with eleven guns from the battery, which compliment was of course immediately returned.—Bombay Times, March 16.

Da. Thatchea. — We notice with regret the death of Assistant-surgeon Charles Thtacher, which took place at Kaira, in Goo-jerat, on the 1st March. Dr. Thatcher was greatly estsemed by his brother-officers on account of his kind and obliging disposition and gentlemanlike deportment. He was the senior assistant-surgeon on the list, having entered the service in 1683.

SERGEANT BENNETT .- We are glad to learn that the recommendation forwarded to Bombay by Generals Dundas and Whish, that a commission should be conferred on Sergeant Bennett, of the Bombay fusiliers, for his gallantry in planting the British flag on the walls of Mooltan, has been forwarded on to the Supreme Government, strongly backed by that of Bombay; there can therefore be little doubt but that the rank of ensign will be conferred on the gallant sergeant, and well he deserves it .-Bombay Times.

FREIGHT. - An advertisement, signed by twenty-four of the FREIGHT.—An auvertisement, eights of the leading houses of Bombay, has been published, intimating that when it is stated in English bills of lading that freight is to be paid at the current rate of exchange, they will pay and re-ceive such freight at ld. per rupee under the rate of exchange at which the Honourable East-India Company was drawing on Bombay at the date of the bill of lading.'

MUNIFICENT DONATIONS .- From the Mofussilite, we learn that the munificent donations of Rs. 5,000 and Rs. 4,000, by Lords Dalhousie and Gough respectively, have been made to the fund "for the widows and orphans of those who have fallen in the late campaign." The fund, if we remember rightly, was originated by the Rev. Mr. Whiting, chaplain to the army of the NAGPORE CONVERSION CASE. - In our last volume (p. 751) we inserted, under this title, an article from the Friend of India, which appeared to have been founded on the statements of the Rev. Mr. Hislop, the missionary concerned, which have been impugned, apparently upon good grounds, by a writer at Nag-pore "anxious for the success of missions," in the Friend of India of Feb. 15. The writer observes, in conclusion: "The apostles themselves, and even their divine Master, did not escape disappointments in their holy calling, and surely Mr. Hislop might reasonably have been a little more patient under what he has met with from the natives of Nagpore than he has shown himself to be. The consequence of his want of this essential quality has been a sad blow to the introduction of Christianity among the people of Nagpore, which it will take years of the nicest and most discreet management to remedy. The city school must ultimately have proved an engine of immense power. Its establishment and apparent success were objects of the greatest interest to all Christians as well as to those who, while they could not openly support it, showed themselves its well-wishers, as to those who felt themselves constrained to hold aloof from it altogether on account of their conscientious disapproval of Mr. Hislop's proceedings. Its over-throw (only partial and temporary it is to be hoped) is a thing to be lamented. Mr. Hislop has shown himself not to be the man to restore it to vigour."

Dost Mahomen. —When Moolraj was some way on the march with our troops, the mysterious fondness with which a cushion which he kept near him constantly was cherished, excited attention: it was opened, and found to contain a variety of stuffing widely different from the material usually employed for such purpose. Gold coins, chiefly European, papers and letters, tumbled out; the most important of them all being a missive from Dost Mahomed, dated so recently as the 22nd December, urging Moolraj to hold out, and assuring him that relief was at hand; that the British troops had already suffered severely, and would speedily be compelled by the heats to withdraw; and that then Mooltan would be relieved, and Whish and Gough driven beyond the Sutlej. A translation of this document has been forwarded to Bombay, and unless it can be shown that the original is a forgery, or the whole a trick-which seems extremely unlikely-the Dost stands as fully committed against us as did Lall Singh when Sheikh Emaum-ood-deen presented his letters. - Bombay Times, Feb. 24.

COMMERCIAL REPORT.
FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FIVE O'CLOCK, MARCH 16, 1849.-During the week succeeding the date of our last report scarcely any business was transacted, owing to the celebration of the Hooli holidays. After these had closed, however, a considerable amount of activity prevailed in the import market, and sales to a large extent have taken place in piece goods of all descriptions-but in particular for those in the Grey.

CHINA.

THE MALTA (steamer), with the London mail of Dec. 23 reached Hong Kong Feb. 16.

Early in the month an interview between the Chinese commissioner and the British plenipotentiary was fixed for the 17th instant. On the 15th H. M. S. Hustings started for Anson's Bay, where the interview was to be held. On the following day, the governor embarked in H. M.'s steam-vessel Medea, and proceeded to the place of meeting. The meeting between the representatives of royalty was on board H.M.S. Hastings. After the customary ceremonials had been disposed of, Seu and Mr. Bonham retired, and were in close conference for a lengthened period. The greatest care was taken to preserve secrecy; the only parties present with the commissioners being Dr. Gutzlaff and Mr. Medhurst as interpreters. Grave matters were unquestionably discussed; but the result and conclusions come to are unknown. Mr. Bonham is said to have looked very serious after the interview, from which it is surmised that Seu was not prepared to carry out the agreement made by his predecessor in April, 1847, and that Canton will not be opened on the 1st of April. We give this merely as gossip; it was evident that both envoys were anxious to keep private what took place (while closeted with Mr. Bonham, Seu had not a single attendant), and current reports do not merit much attention. Three days previous to the meeting with Mr. Bonham, Seu had an interview with the American commissioner on board the U. S. S. Plymouth. - Friend of China, Feb. 26.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

Mr. B. H. Hodgson, late Resident at the Court of Nepal, the indefatigable investigator of the natural history and ethnology of India, has transmitted to the Asiatic Society of Bengal a Comparative Vocabulary of the Aboriginal Languages of Central Ladia, which is published in the Society's Journal, and forms a complement of his summary view of the affinities of the Sub-Himalayan aborigines. The languages from which the present vocabulary is collected are seven in number,—namely, the Siahbbam Kol, the Sontal, the Bhamij, the Uraon, the Mandala, the Rájmahali, and the Góndi. The affinities of these tongues," Mr. Hodgson observes, are very striking; so much so, that the first five may be safely denominated dialects of the great Kól language; and through the Uraon speech we trace without difficulty the further connection of the language of the Koles with that of the 'hill men' of the Rajmahal and Bhaugalpur ranges. Nor are there wanting obvious links between the several tongues above enumerated -all which we may class under the head Kol-and that of the Gonds of the Vindhia, whose speech again has been lately shown by Mr. Elliot to have much resemblance both in vocables and structure to the cultivated tongues of the Deccan. Thus we are already rapidly approaching to the realization of the hypothesis put forth in my Essay on the Koch, Bodo, and Dhimél,—to wit, that all the Tamulians of India have a common fountain and origin, like all the Arians; and that the innuexable diversities of spoken language characterizing the former sace are but the more or less superficial effects of their long and atter dispersion and segregation, owing to the savage tyranny of the latter race in days when the rights of conquest were aynonymous with a license to destroy, spoil, and enslave. That the Arian population of India descended into it about 8,000 years ago from the north-west, as conquerors, and that they completely subdued all the open and cultivated parts of Hindoctan, Bengal, and the most adjacent tracts of the Deccan,* but failed to extend their effective sway and colonization further south, are quasi historical deductions,† confirmed daily more and more by the results of ethnological research. And we thus find an easy and natural explanation of the facts, that in the Deccan, where the original tenants of the soil have been able to hold together in possession of it, the aboriginal languages exhibit a deal of integrity and refinement; whilst in the north, where the pristine population has been hunted into jungly and malarious recesses, the aboriginal tongues are broken into innumemble rude and shapeless fragments. Nevertheless, those gments may yet be brought together by large and careful induction, for modern ethnology has actually accomplished elsewhere yet more brilliant feats than this, throwing upon the great antihistoric movements of nations a light as splendid as useful. But if I hold forth, beforehand, the probable result of this investigation in the shape of a striking hypothesis, in order to stimulate the pains-taking accumulator of facts, and even intimate that our present materials already offer the most encouraging earnest of success, I trust that the whole tenour and substance of my Essay on the Koch, Bodo, and Dhimal, will canfice to assure all candid persons that I am no advocate for esweeping conclusions from insufficient premises, and that I desire to see the ethnology of India conducted upon the most extended scale, with careful weighing of every available item of evidence that is calculated to demonstrate the unity,1 or otherwise, of the Tamulian race."

At the meeting of the Geographical Society of Bombay, held on the 22nd February, a paper was read on certain meteorological phenomena observed from the Mozuffer steam-vessel, betwist Bombay and Aden, on the 23rd January (mentioned p. 219), by Commander G. B. Kempthorne, I.N. The following are the principal facts contained in the paper:-

At 6.30 r. m. observed a very remarkable milky appearance in the water, the colour assuming the same tint as a shallow mud or sand bank. The sea, which had a few minutes before been turbulent and confused, suddenly became smooth and placid, and the air felt cold and chilly. In an hour the whole verge of the horizon, as far as the eye could reach, was most brilliantly The vessel shortly after entered a vast body of illuminated. water of the most dazzling brightness, and of a highly phosphorescent nature; it looked as if we were sailing over a boundless plain of snow, or a sea of quicksilver. The surface of the ocean for miles in extent was unbroken,—not a wave or ripp disturbed it, and the waters seemed so dense and solid that the Mozuffer appeared as if she was forcing her way through matter That part of the surface which was broken by the streke of our huge paddle-wheels, resembled small patches of thick milk or cream. The sky and everything around us were quite lighted up by it. The weather was peculiarly fine, though the atmosphere was damp and moist; the wind was light from the N.W.; stars overhead clear and light, but those of a lesser altitude were rendered dim by a haze. The horizon nearly the whole time was dark and ill-defined; a few thin cumuli, floating very low down, occasionally swept past, but no other peculiarity in the atmosphere could be perceived until about 10 o'clock, when a singular light was seen in the heavens to the northward, as if day was dawning, or the full moon was either setting or just rising. It strongly resembled a faint Aurora Borealis, being of a roseate tinge near the horizon, and was a steady fixed light, but without those coruscations which are usually observed in the higher latitudes. It extended along the horizon in the form of a segment of a circle from N.W. to N.E., and the altitude of the centre of the arch was 15°. It continued visible until a few minutes after midnight, when it disappeared as suddenly as it appeared, and the sea about the same period lost also its luminous quality. The light in the heavens, and the lightness of the sea, were, however, again seen, for about ten minutes, at 2 A.M., when both became once more invisible. The horizon, except where the light appeared, was everywhere dark and indistinct, and could not be made out: the sky and sea were apparently blended together. The phenomenon was altogether as beautiful as it was extraordinary. I could have stood on the deck gazing at it the whole night; there was something grand and sublime in such a scene. We were upwards of aix hours in passing through this vast body of luminous water, and during that time we ran a distance of upwards of forty miles. Our lat. on first entering it was 16° 13' S., and long. 61° 51' E.; so that our position was exactly abreast of the entrance to the Persian Gulf, and in the fair channel to the Red Sea. From the fact of our having seen immense quantities of sea-weed floating past whilst in this luminous water, I should conclude the aces mulation of this and other decayed matter, whether vegetable or animalculæ, was the sole cause of this phosphorescent appearance; and that all this matter might have been swept out of those narrow seas by strong currents, which meet no doubt about this spot; and I am still more inclined to believe that this is the case, as a luminous stream of water has often been noticed nearly in the same lat. and long., and about the same season of the year. Several buckets of water were drawn up by Dr. Wilson, of the Mozuffer, but nothing whatever could be seen. It seemed as clear as crystal; on taking a bottle of it, however, in the dark, it became highly phosphorescent, giving out a strong light. It was full of animalculæ: some were in the shape of most minute globules of gelatinous substance, and others were not unlike small worms, about an inch in length, and about the size of a fine hair. On removing the bottle to the light, the animalculæ became instantly invisible. The light seen in the heavens I cannot account for, unless it was the low fleecy clouds which hung on the verge of the horizon reflected back the brightness of the sen; but why the whole sky should not have assumed the same appearance, I cannot imagine. It continued to shine in one spot only, and disappeared at the same time the sea lost its brilliancy.

It is worth noticing, that on the same day a violent thunderstorm occurred at Delhi, and heavy rain fell on the Chenab and Jelum, and at Lahore; and that on the 22nd an earthquake was felt at Calcutta.

"The main results of our visit to Tibet," observes Lieut. Strachey, "are that the plains are very evidently produced by lakes or sea, the great mass of them being perfect gravel to a depth of 800 or 1,000 feet, to which extent the great ravines cut into them. The part of the country towards the long lake of Gyanima seems to have been much more recently under water than the other, and in fact appears to be in many places even now imperfectly drained and subject to flood. The whole of the country from the lake to Rakas Tal, and along almost the whole of the southern edge of the latter, is a great eruption of volcanic rock, and the bar between the lakes is probably also caused by this trap eruption, as it consists of gravel (exactly such as now exists in the lakes) to a height of 600 or 800 feet above the present level of the water."

The conjecture, that the discrepancies in the different copies of the Persian translation of Tabary (which are so great that the various readings cannot be reduced to a certain number of original texts) are owing to attempts of copyists to improve the obsolete expressions of the original, has been confirmed by the discovery, in the King of Oude's library, of a work of Imam Gazzaly (who died A.H. 505), entitled, "A History of the Prophets," of which a very full account, with extracts, is given by Dr. Aloys Sprenger, in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, for October.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

LONDON,

THURSDAY, April 19, 1849.

Sir Charles Napier's letter to Sir John Hobhouse, upon "the baggage of the Indian army," has provoked a rather smart reply from Colonel Burlton, late commissary-general of the Bengal army, who, possessing excellent practical knowledge of the subject, has disputed some of Sir Charles's propositions, considering that "some good and wholesome truths" are adulterated with "fallacies and crudities." He thinks the proposition, "that all private baggage should be carried by the public," open to serious objections; and he attacks vehemently Sir Charles's pet project, very favourably received in certain quarters, of establishing a camel baggage-corps as the grand remedy for all the evils attending the enormous impedimenta of an Indian army. Colonel Burlton says that, from the first, the success of the baggage-corps was more than doubted by those best acquainted with the subject, and that "time and experience have stamped it a failure."

The off-hand style of all Sir Charles Napier's literary compositions exposes them to hostile criticism, and Colonel Burlton has made some good hits at the letter in his "Few Brief Comments," which are almost as amusing as the letter itself, before he deals hand-to-hand with the panacea, namely, the baggage-corps, which he describes as "a given number of ordinary baggage-camels, organized, after a fashion, into a kind of mounted and loaded regiment, every camel having its rider armed and disciplined." Colonel Burlton admits that there is no reason why a body of camels thus organized should not do as much good service as the same number of other camels in carrying baggage; but he doubts if they would do more; and he shows why it has happened, and must happen, that, after trial, the experiment has failed in Scinde. The utility of this plan must consist chiefly in its general adoption; whereas Colonel Burlton shows that there are comparatively few stations in the Madras and Bombay Presidencies where camels will live; and they will not live in the lower stations of the Bengal presidency; so that the scheme could be worked out only in the upper provinces, from Benares Surmising that Sir Charles Napier is not practically acquainted with the system under which baggage-cattle are provided for the troops in that part of India, he has given a brief explanation of it, and he shows that there was no obstruction on account of baggage in the grand movement of troops upon the Sikh invasion. He accuses Sir Charles Napier of admitting a "prominent fallacy" into his pamphlet, when he compares the advantages of his baggage-corps, not with the regular establishment of public cattle, but with the common class of hired cattle, and their attendants picked up at random.

The result of the "Comments" is to show that such a corps would be little or no improvement on the existing system, whilst it would be enormously expensive. Colonel Burlton adds some valuable remarks upon the general question of the baggage of the Indian army (apart from the subject of the baggage-corps); but this is a matter into which, encumbered as our columns are at present, we cannot enter. The subject is, however, of great importance; and although Sir Charles Napier may have discussed it too much in the spirit of a controversialist, he has done much service in noticing it. The fact mentioned in our last issue (p. 194), that, prior to the battle of Goojrat, Lord Gough had been able to reduce the quantity of baggage in his army to such an extent that no less than 7,000 or 8,000 carriage camels were dispensed with, proves the enormity of the evil, and that it is capable of a remedy.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

Sia,—I in common with many others have been much surprised to find that no notice has been taken of the departure for India as a volunteer of so distinguished an officer as Major-General George Hunter, C. B., who, on the 17th ult. was invited by the Court of Directors to meet Sir Charles Napier at dinnes, and who was on the Wednesday following presented to the Queen by Lord Ellenborough.

General Hunter was selected for a very important command in Upper Scinde in April 1844, where he continued under that gallant officer Sir Charles Napier for nearly three years, during which time he distinguished himself in various ways, and so completely gained the good opinion of Sir Charles, that he was requested by this officer to accompany him to India, an offer which the major-general joyfully accepted, and at a few days' notice left England with the new Commander-in-Chief. Whilst in Scinde the major-general was employed in a very arduous service, a campaign in the barren hills of that country; he also had the command, on the departure of Sir Charles, of the army, above 12,000 strong, destined to co-operate with Lord Gough in the Punjab; and he had, of all others, the most trying duty to perform, the suppression of a very serious mutiny; in this he exhibited such patience, temper, and discretion as to elicit the highest praise from Sir Charles Napier and Lord Ellenborough in general orders.

The general in early days was a volunteer at Java, where soon after landing he was wounded, and afterwards, at the storm of Jaquecallia or Cornellis, he was blown up, and rendered helpless for a long time. The gallant Sir Robert Rollo Gillespie placed him on his personal staff. In the Nepaul war in 1815, 1816, and 1817, he was employed in various ways, and acted as staff to a native regiment, and a flank battalion composed of Europeans. In 1826 he commanded the old 21st N.I. at the storm of Bhurtpore, where he was very severely wounded, having lost the use of the left arm. He was selected for a high command at Loodiana and Ferozepore, when the services of an experienced officer were deemed most necessary; in short, throughout, he has zealously and faithfully performed his duty, meriting on all occasions the approbation of his superiors; but as he is one of those men who never bring forward their services, he remains without reward.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
A FRIEND OF GENERAL HUNTES.

In Sumatra, eggs are preserved in a peculiar manner: when fresh, they are covered with a paste of red earth, that keeps them good for many months. The earth is of an extremely saline nature, so that, when the eggs are prepared for use, they are so salt that it is not every European palate that would relish an earth-preserved egg.

Moolaaj's New Gold Coins, recently struck in Moolaan, have been obtained in the bazar at Loodianah—so rapidly have these symbols of sovereignty got into circulation! According to the native merchants, Moolraj has coined from eighteen to twenty lakis of these pieces, which are of very rude coinage. They have been used by him for the payment of his troops, and considerable quantities of them have been already brought into British territory; and several have been brought to England.

EAST-INDIAN RAILWAY.

A special meeting of this company was held on the 10th of April, for the purpose of considering the terms and conditions posed by the East-India Company, and deciding thereon.

The Chairman (Mr. Aglionby) said he knew there was a general feeling in favour of the undertaking, and that it was the intention of all the authorities, both here and in India, to give every fair construction to the terms, and to agree to any reasonable modification that might be requisite in detail. He felt a strong conviction, from the information he had received, that such modifications would not be less favourable than the general

Mr. Hickins considered the terms satisfactory, and the security so good that there was not the possibility of a loss. He hoped the proprietors would readily subscribe the 1,000,000l., and any further sum necessary to carry out the extension of the line. He moved-

"That it is the opinion of this meeting that the terms offered in the letter of Mr. Meivill, of the 28th March, 1849, are such as this maceting approves, and the directors are requested to conclude a contract in accordance therewith, subject to such modification as they may think expedient."

He thought they were greatly indebted to the directors for their exertions, and proposed that 3,000 of the unappropriated shares be given to the directors.

The Chairman said the directors could not under any circumstances accept of them. They felt a very high reward from the success that had attended their labours. They would have no objection to dispose of the unappropriated shares for the benefit It was very probable that they might be called of the company. It was very probable that they might be called upon to enlarge the capital, but the directors would on no account accept an allotment of shares, to dispose of them at a premium in the market.

Mr. Flood seconded the motion. The proposition of the East-India Company he considered was highly satisfactory.

Capt. Henderson inquired whether the guarantee of 5 per cent would be extended to more than 1,000,000l. of capital? He believed the line to Rajmahal would be more advantageous to construct than that leading to Mirzapore. The proposed capital would only construct a portion of the line, which he feared would not be remunerative unless extended.

The Chairman said the proposed terms were not inflexible. He had reason to know that such modifications would be made with regard to the direction of the line and the amount of capital as would be favourable to the company. The line would start from Calcutta, and terminate, in the first instance, at This portion of the line would be equally available for the extension to Rajmahal in a northerly direction, or to Mirzapore in a north-westerly direction. The exact course of the line would be decided by the authorities in India.

It was stated that a charter would be granted to the company, and what could not be embodied in the charter would be provided for by Act of Parliament. The shares would be reduced from 50l. to 20% each. All the scrip upon which only 5s. per share had been paid had been forfeited, but the shares upon which only Il. per share had been paid would not be forfeited, provided the holders would shortly pay up the call of 21. per share which was overdue.

The resolution was carried unanimously, as were the following:-

"That it is the opinion of this meeting that all shares on which the call of 2! shall not be paid on or before the 20th April inst. should be forfeited, subject to a discretion of the board in particular

"That the cordial thanks of the proprietors be returned to the chairman and directors of the company for the energy, disinterestedness, patience, and perseverance which they have throughout manifested in the conduct of the company's affairs, and which have anabled them finally to overcome difficulties of no ordinary character, and to meet the shareholders to day under circumstances and prospects as promising as formerly they were gloomy and adverse.'

LUMINOUS ANIMALCULES. - We observe that the sea is at present covered with those light red animalcules, which every now and then make their appearance, and give so strange a tinge to the colour of the water,—which, generally speaking, all around, is at present so remarkable for the brightness and purity of its Large patches of a reddish tint lie side by side with those of the deepest azure, all over the harbour, and around Back Bay. When myriads of creatures such as these appear over leagues and leagues of ocean, we cease to wonder at the formation of such rocks as the chalk, the nummulite, colite, or tripoli, which are made up literally of one mass of skeletons. - Bombay Times, Feb. 24.

"THE PLAIN OF MARATHON looks very dreary," says Dr. Wordsworth, writing on the spot; "it has no hedges, and few prominent objects of any kind. In this level solitary place, the eye is naturally arrested by one object, which raises itself above the surface of the plain more conspicuously than anything else. That object is the Tumulus which covers the ashes of those Athenians who fell in the battle of Marathon. It produces a sensation of awe to find oneself alone with such an object as this. It was a wise design which buried these Athenians together under such a tomb in the place on which they fell."

HEIGHT OF THE HIMALAYAS. - The Great Trigonometrical Survey has determined the elevations of the great peaks of the Himalaya range. The highest (supposed to be the highest spot on the surface of the globe) is Kunchinginga, West Peak, 28,176 feet; the East Peak is 27,825 feet. The following are the elevations of other peaks:—Junnoo, 25,311; Kabroo, 24,004; Chumalari (in Tibet), 23,929.

The Asiatic Society has obtained an aerolite, or a mass of meteoric iron, found imbedded in the soil on the top of the Kurruckpore hills, near Monghyr, which had been exhumed and worshipped by the natives for many years. It is a block, weighing about 160 lbs., of a somewhat conical, oviform, disk shape, standing on a sort of foot, and slightly truncated at both ends; it contains iron, nickel, cobalt, chromium, silica, alumina, and traces of arsenic and selenium.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ELECTION OF DIRECTORS. - On the 11th April, a ballot was taken at the East-India House for the election of six Directors, in the room of Lieut. General Sir James Law Lushington, G.C.B., Mr. George Lyall, Mr. Elliot M'Naghten, Mr. John Petty Muspratt, Mr. Martin Tucker Smith, M.P., and Mr. William Wigram, who go out by rotation. The scrutineers remr. Joseph William Eastwick, Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart., M. P., Lieut. Colonel William Henry Sykes, Mr. John Clarmont Whiteman, and Sir Henry Willock, K. I. S. A Court of Directors was also held at the East-India House, when the thanks of the Court were voted unanimously to Lieut. General Sir James Law Lushington, G.C.B., Chairman, and Major-General Sir Archibald Galloway, K. C. B., Deputy-Chairman, for their great application and attention to the affairs of the East-India Company during the past year. On the following day, a Court of Directors was held at the East-India House, when the new Directors took the oath and their seats. Major-General Sir Archibald Galloway, K. C. B., was chosen Chairman, and Mr. John Shepherd, Deputy Chairman, for the year ensuing.

THE INDIAN ARMY. - Major-General Sir Archibald Galloway, K. C.B., has presented an infantry cadetship to the son of Major-General Whish, in testimony of the general's services. The youth has been in his father's camp during the late siege operations before Mooltan.

THE REV. WALTER JOHN WHITING, so distinguished in the reports of the battle of Chillianwallah, as the Padre, joined Lord Gough's army as a volunteer: he considered that he had no right to comparatively inglorious ease, as one of the Company's chaplains, when death was likely soon to be abroad, and thousands might need ghostly comfort to prepare them for the battle or its consequences. The step was highly agreeable to Lord Gough and the troops generally. When the cry "Forward!" gave impulse to the mighty power that confronted the Sikh forces on the 13th of January, Mr. Whiting busied himself in preparing a hospital for the wounded, as well as in making preparations to perform the sacramental rites for all who might desire to partake of the privilege of consolation in the hour of peril. It was when occupied in ministering double aid to the sick and the dying that a report reached the hospital that H. M.'s 14th dragoons were hurrying from the field of blood with their backs to the enemy. Our gallant soldier-priest in an instant leaped on his own horse, pistol in hand; he met a party of the regiment named with their chargers' heads turned in the direction of safety. The rev. gentleman rallied them,-upbraided them for their want of firmness,-reminded them of home and honour-and finally led them back to where blows were ringing. Having achieved thus much, he hastened again to his own vocation, and took his place once more by the side of the wounded. -Church and State Gazette.

WHITTINGTON AND HIS CAT .- This fiction, like many other European tales, has been borrowed from the East. A named Keis, the son of a poor widow of Siraf, in the Persian Gulf, embarked for India with his sole possession, a cat. Arriving at a place where the mice or rats were so numerous that they swarmed in the king's palace, and even devoured the meats off his table at dinner, Keis, by means of the animal in his possession, drove away and exterminated the intruders, was enriched by the king, and, returning to the Gulf, settled as a merchant upon the island of Keis or Keish, which is called after his name.

DESERT PHANTOMS. - The passage in Milton's Comus, in which

Of calling shapes and beckoning shadows dire, And acry tongues, that syllable men's names, On sands, and shores, and desert wildernesses, is supposed by Dr. Warton to refer to an Eastern superstition recorded by Marco Polo, that, in deserts and wildernesses, a solitary traveller hears himself sometimes called by his name, in a familiar voice, or accosted by a friendly stranger, with a view of leading him out of the way to perish, the agents being "desert phantoms," who sometimes delude whole caravans by filling the air with bewitching music.

PERSIAN HYPERBOLE. - The Persian language allows, and even requires in some cases, hyperboles which appear extravagant and ridiculous to the colder funcies of Europeans. A servant in Persia, observing that a piece of hay had stuck upon his master's beard, gave him notice of it by remarking that "a nightingale had perched upon the stalk of his rose!"

BOOKS.

An Inquiry into the Proper Mode of rendering the Word "God" in translating the Sacred Scriptures into the Chinese Language: with an Examination of the various Opinions which have prevailed on this important Subject, especially in reference to their influence on the diffusion of Christianity in China. By Sir George Thomas Staunton, Bart., M.P. Booth.

PERSONS unacquainted with the religious tenets of the Chinese, and with the genius and structure of their written language, cannot conceive the importance of the subject to which this accomplished Chinese scholar has here directed his attention. The question, as to the proper term for presenting to the Chinese mind the Christian idea of the name of the Deity, is of the deepest moment. " A mistake on this point," observes Dr. Boone, the Missionary Bishop in China of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States, "affects almost every question of theology, especially our testimony against Polytheism, and our teaching on the subject of the Trinity." Teen, 'heaven,' implying the Great One dwelling in Heaven; Teen.choo, 'Lord of Heaven;' Shang-te, 'the Supreme Ruler;' Shin, 'Spirit,' have had their advocates and their objectors. selection has, however, been reduced by recent discussion to two,-namely, Shin and Shang-tc, and between these it has been found impossible to come to a decision satisfactory to all parties, the former being capable of being understood in the sense of 'a false god,' and also 'the spirits of deceased parents; and the latter is the term employed by the Chinese in their ancient books to denote the object of their worship (said to be synonymous with Teen), and the use of it was expressly interdicted by the Pope to the Roman Catholic Christians in China.

Sir George Staunton, after carefully examining the arguments for and against the use of each of these terms, concludes that it is but a choice of difficulties. "In the Chinese language," he observes, "there neither is, nor could there well be expected to be, any word which fully and correctly conveys the idea which we Christians attach to the word God. Words are nothing but the symbols of ideas, and we have not yet implanted the idea itself in the Chinese mind. All, therefore, that we can do, in respect to a choice of words, is to take the best word which the language supplies, and then to make the best use we can of it. I think I have shown that the term, or phrase, Shang-te, has, from time immemorial, been employed in China in a sense more nearly approaching to that which we attach to God, than any other which at present exists in the language of the country. I, therefore, conclude that we ought to employ it for this purpose, not only because it is the most appropriate phrase, but also because its rejection will be attended by the various positive incongruities and inconveniences to which I have alluded." Shang-te, he adds, is not only the most faithful rendering of the word, but "it is also idiomatic, graceful, and in harmony with Chinese notions and feelings."

A Discourse on the Study of Oriental Languages and Literature.

By CHARLES M'DOUALL. Edinburgh. Clark.

THIS Discourse was prepared to be read as introductory to a course of study in Hebrew and other Oriental Languages, of which the author had been appointed Professor, in the University of Edinburgh; but, being precluded by the University tests, he has published it.

"While at the present day," Mr. M'Douall remarks, "the utility of studying foreign languages generally, and the living languages of the East in particular, is fully acknowledged by all who advert to the cosmopolitan relations and the grave responsibilities of British subjects, as well as by those who can appreciate the rich magazines of noble literature to which these languages afford access, it seems to be expedient, if we propose to base our future researches, as has been the practice in this place hitherto, upon ancient tongues,—say, those of Palestine and India,—not to rest satisfied with a vague reference to the authority of our forefathers, but to suggest, with due brevity, such reasons as may justify and recommend our choice."

He then takes a brief comprehensive glance at the whole subject, with the view of showing the importance of studying the dead languages of the East, preparatory to the acquisition of the modern, living dialects, throwing out, by the way, in striking and eloquent language, observations upon the most venerable of the Oriental tongues, and suggesting strong inducements to their study on their own account.

The Anglo-Saxon. Longman.

This is a periodical work of an entirely new character. Its object, as shadowed out, for it is not very distinctly traced, in the Prospectus and in its first part, is to establish a rallying-point for what we may venture to term Anglo-Saxonism, by means of a publication which shall serve as a receptacle for the concentration, and a vehicle for the dissemination, of Anglo-Saxon principles of civilization, which have been already planted in so many remote and widely dissociated portions of the four great divisions of the globe. The motto of the conductors is the celebrated saying of the Great Gregory, on beholding at Rome the "angelic forms" of certain "early leaflets of the mighty Anglo-Saxon Branch," exposed for sale in the market-place, "Non Angli, sed Branch," exposed for sale in the market-place, "Non Angli, sed Angeli;" from which time, "the tree of the Anglo-Saxon race took root and flourished, and the Anglo-Saxons have been accomplishing their destiny;" the surface of the planet is dotted over by these Angli, or Angeli, or "messengers, hitherto of civilization and commerce, but now destined to become messengers of better tidings even than these, the future heralds of light and knowledge, about to work out some realization of the words 'Peace on Earth and Good Will to all Men,' " which the conductors of this work "believe to be the Destiny, the Mission, of the Anglo-Saxons." As the first and most important step, there must be some common bond of union amongst the Anglo-Saxon race; they differ in political interests, in social institutions, in religious observances; but, rejecting these and all other topics of this nature, which are matters of difference and disagreement, because they are such, "there is one field upon which we may all meet as brothers; one platform from which we may all teach without confusion; one bond of union which can embrace all our race, - our Mother Language, - the kindly English tongue.'

If the object in view be carried out in this catholic spirit; if no infusion of nationalities, and above all of theological controversies, be suffered to adulterate the articles, the work may strike a chord that will vibrate far and wide.

Too little is yet before us to warrant a decided opinion as to the literary merits of the work; but one thing strikes us as inconsistent with its avowed scope and aim, namely, the frequent use of foreign languages,—Greek, Latin, and French. If "there is no language so rich as the English," surely it is objectionable to interlard such a work as this with common-place quotations or trivial phrases from other tongues, which is, generally speaking, a pedantic and affected practice.

"One of the prettiest optical phenomena I have witnessed," says Dr. Hooker, "is frequent in the clear skies of these elevated regions (in the Vindhya hills); that of the false sun-rise and sun-set, often consisting of beams converging from the opposite horizon, and meeting at the zenith the direct sun's rays. I have seen it equally vivid against a pure blue sky and against dark lowering clouds."

BURIED TREASURES, in the shape of jewels as well as the precious metals, to the extent of millions, are supposed still to exist in the East, the inhabitants knowing no other mode, in ancient and even modern times, of securing their property from plunder in wars and invasions. Hence the jealousy with which they view the explorations of English antiquaries. They believe that a fatality awaits the appropriation by the discoverer of a hidden treasure.

THE YAJURVEDA.—Dr. A. Weber, of Berlin, is now publishing the whole Yajurveda; it will be finished in seven years, at the rate of one volume yearly.

DAVID JONES, Actuary,

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will shew the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 10th of May, 1848, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a liberal reduction if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

FINE HEAD of HAIR.—ROWLAND'S MACASSAR

OIL.—The extraordinary efficacy and happy amalgamation of its purely exotic materials have rendered it justly renowned throughout the world for its remarkable virtues in nourishing, preserving, and beautifying the hawan hair. It insinuates its balsanic properties into the pores of the head, nourishes the hair in its embryo state, accelerates its growth, cleanses it from scurf and dandriff, sustains it in maturity, and continues its possession of healthy vigour, silky softness, and luxurious redundancy, to the latest period of human life. Its operation in cases of baldness is peculiarly active; so that, in numerous instances wherein other remedies have been tried in vain, Rowland's Macassar (1) has superseded the ornaments of art, by reinstating, in full plenitude, the permanent gifts and graces of nature. In the growth of whiskers, eyebrows, and mustachios, it is also unfailing in its stimulative operation. For children it is especially recommended, as forming the basis of a beautiful head of hair, and rendering the use of the fine comb unnecessary. A small pamphlet accompanies each bottle of Itowland's Macassar Oil, wherein important hints and advice will be found on the culture of the hair of infancy, and on its preservation and beauty through the several stages of human life. Its invaluable properties have obtained the especial patronage of her Majesty the Queen, the Court, and the whole of the Royal Family of Great Britain, and of every Court of the civilized world; and the high esteem in which it is universally held, together with numerous testimonials constantly received of its efficacy, afford the best and surest proofs of its menus.—Price 3s. 6d.; 7s.; or family bottles (equal to 4 small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s.

CAUTION.—On the wrapper of each bottle of the genuine article are these words, in two lines,—ROW LAND'S MACASSAR Oil. The same are engraved on the back of the wrapper nearly 1,500 times, containing 29,029 letters. Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS,

NEW MAP OF THE PUNJAB

AND SIKH TERRITORIES.

Drawn by JOHN WALKER. On One Sheet, price 5s., or in a Case, 6s.

"A new Map of these districts has just been published by Messrs. ALLEN and Co., of Leadenhall Street, upon which apparently great care has been bestowed. The Map is very clearly printed, and the scenes of the military operations, to which so much interest is at present attached, are laid down with such perspicuity, that it would be easy to follow almost every march of the army. The Map is said to have been compiled from the most authentic sources of information."—Times, March 1, 1849.

"A new Map of the Punjab and Sikh Territory, just completed by Messrs.

**ALLEN, and compiled from the most authentic sources of information, with great care, contains all the places mentioned in the accounts of the military operations. At the present moment, it is a most valuable publication, and we heartily recommend it."—Naval and Military Gazette, March 3, 1849.

heartily recommend it."—Naval and Military Gazette, March 3, 1849.

"Messrs. ALLEN have just issued a finely-engraved Map of the Punjab and Sikh Territory, with due attention to the spots where our gallant troops have so valiantly fought. Who, at the present moment, would not pore over such a Map,—with Interest point out where the brave Cureton fell, or where Edwardes earned the wreath that now adorns his youthful brow? Or, if we take a more painful glance, how many mothers, sisters, friends, will not, with mourned eyes, wander in their imagination along the banks of the Chenab, and mark the spot upon the Map where a son, a brother, or a friend lies buried man homourable grave on the bloody field of Chillianwallah? And such a Map was wanting, and Messrs. ALLEN have at once provided one with great care and skill. This Map folds up in a neat cover, and can be carried in the pocket."—Morning Chronicle, March 6, 1849.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE fruits of the victory at Goojerat are, the entire surrender of the Sikh army, including the commander, Shere Singh, his father, Chuttur Singh, his brothers, and most of his chiefs, and all their artillery, without a shot fired!

Our last accounts left Major-General Sir Walter Gilbert, with 15,000 men and forty guns, in pursuit of the wreck of the Sikh army, which had crossed the Jelum. General Gilbert passed this river without opposition, though with some difficulty. The Hydaspes, though no longer "fabulous," is a capricious stream; in some seasons it is confined to a single channel; in others, when rains fall, or the mountain snows begin to melt, it assumes the form of five. six, and even seven rapid currents, boiling round small interposing islands. The British troops had upon this occasion to cross in succession five of these streams before they reached the right bank, and this operation consumed four days, being completed on the 5th March. Being informed that the enemy were but eighteen miles ahead, General Gilbert posted on without waiting for the heavy guns, which did not cross the river (with Brigadier McLeod's force) until the 9th. On the 4th March, the Bengal troops marched for Rotas, and were followed next day by the Bombay division. On the 6th, Major and Mrs. Lawrence and family, Lieutenants Bowie and Herbert, Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, and other prisoners. who had been for some time in the hands of the Sikhs. arrived in General Gilbert's camp, and announced that the Sikh chiefs and their army were prepared to lay down their arms. The fort of Rotas was found to be evacuated by the enemy, and was occupied by the British troops. This fortress is described as an old structure of immense extent, which must have been built long before the use of artillery; the walls, which are seven or eight miles in circumference, are of immense thickness. On the 7th the Bukreealah pass was traversed without much difficulty. On the 8th Raja Shere Singh came into camp to make his personal surrender, and to enter into arrangements for that of his army, and he returned to communicate the terms to them, which were unconditional surrender. Some delay taking place, rumours were afloat that the Sikhs had changed their minds, and were determined not to lay down their arms, which was the primary condition, without another struggle, their force being still far from contemptible.

General Gilbert put his troops in motion and advanced in battle-array, in order to indulge their wishes, or to accelerate their decision. On the 11th our troops reached a place called Hoormuk, where the Sikhs were to have come in and resigned their arms; and soon after their arrival, Shere Singh, Chuttur Singh, and Aoctar Singh, came in, with the principal Sirdars, the guns taken from us at Chillianwallah being brought in the same afternoon. Shere Singh returned to his people, and next day (the 12th) a wing of the 3rd and one of the 19th regiments of Bombay native infantry proceeded to the ford near the camp, where the Sikh soldiers crossed and delivered up their arms, passing through the wing of each regiment, and receiving one rupes each to subsist them on their way home; and being allowed to retain their horses. The number of chiefs of note who delivered up their swords was thirteen; the number of guns surrendered was forty-one, making the quantity of artillery taken and surrendered since the commencement of the outbreak 158 pieces.

As soon as this business was despatched, General Gilbert left Hoormuk for Rawul Pindee, where a large body of Sikhs had assembled, mostly horsemen and old veterans of Runjeet Singh's army, who likewise surrendered, the process of disarmament being completed at Manikyala, a place celebrated for its ancient tope, on the 14th March, when the whole of the Sikh troops, to the number of 16,000 men, had surrendered their arms.

The indefatigable General now turned his attention to the Affghans, and on the same day pushed on, by forced marches, towards Attock, in hopes of overtaking them before they had crossed the Indus. When about six miles from the river, intelligence was received by Major Mackeson that Attock had just been evacuated by the Affghans, who were about to destroy the bridge of boats on the river, to check the pursuit. Upon this, the General, with Major Mackeson and a small escort of Nicholson's Irregulars, and the whole staff, galloped towards the river, and from an eminence observed a party of the enemy busy in the work of destruction, 5,000 or 6,000 being drawn up on the right bank. The sight of the British, supposed to have been two marches distant, caused a sudden commotion among the Affghans, and fifteen of the best boats forming the bridge were secured. The artillery being brought up, the enemy retired, after firing some guns. The fort of Attock was occupied on the 17th, and on the following morning, the small fort of Hyderabad, on the right bank of the river, and which commanded the town, was also taken.

The Governor-General's "General Order," it will be seen, declares that "the war is not yet concluded; nor can there be any cessation of hostilities until Dost Mahomed Khan and the Affghan army are either driven from the province of Peshawur or destroyed within it." In accordance with this declaration, preparations were made by General Gilbert for following up Dost Mahomed and his people to the Khyber Pass, the guardians of which, it is said, have been negotiated with to close that dreaded defile. Brigadier Campbell joined the Major-General's camp on the 17th, and Brigadier McLeod, with a detachment, consisting of the heavy guns, a troop of horse artillery, the 1st light cavalry, the 12th and 13th irregular cavalry, H.M.'s 53rd and 61st foot, and the 13th and 22nd N.I. was expected soon to join. The latest intelligence from Six Walter Gilbert's camp is dated the 19th March, when the troops were crossing the Indus as expeditiously as possible (the river being at this part deep, rapid, and dangerous), three regiments being at that time encamped on the right bank, and the ensuing day the whole force was expected to be across. The Affghans were in full retreat, and if the Khyberries should obstruct their passage, they would probably be made prisoners to a man.

The operations of General Gilbert appear to have been very materially assisted by a movement of Captain Abbott, in the rear of the Sikhs, the advance of Colonel Steinbach, with some of Maharaja Golab Singh's men, on the right, and the march of Shaikh Emam-ood-Deen on the left, by Chukoowal.

The Commander-in-Chief, having been in person to inspect Rotas and Jelum, made up his mind to erect cantonments at the latter place; and a force under Lieut.-Col. Mercer, consisting of the 20th, 53rd, and 59th N.I. with six guns, has accordingly been directed to be stationed there. At Wuzeerabad cantonments are also to be formed, where a portion of the troops recently forming "the Army of the Punjab" will be located.

The captive Sikh chiefs were sent under a guard to Lahore. Their lives are to be spared, but their estates are forfeited, and they are to be removed to a distance from the Punjab, with moderate allowances.

Great interest is felt respecting the future fate of the vast territory now at our disposal. The Governor-General's intention regarding the Punjab had not been made known at Agra on the 28th March; but the order for so many civilians to repair to Loodiana, to report themselves to the resident at Lahore, was considered at Agra conclusive as to the annexation of the country, and the opinion of official men at Calcutta is said to be uniform, that no plan which does not embrace annexation of the greater part of the Punjab would be a wise policy. The Bombay Telegraph says, "There seems every reason to believe that the Punjab is to be annexed; orders are said to have been issued to the 14th Irregular Cavalry, and to a troop of the Governor-General's body-guard, to be in readiness to escort the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, together with Moolraj and Narain Singh, to the provinces. It is further added that Mr. John Lawrence had come to Lahore, with the supposed intention of receiving the final instructions of Lord Dalhousie regarding the removal of the youthful ruler of the Punjab." The north-west papers announce a fact, from which annexation is concluded to be certain; namely, that the government of the Punjab is to be conducted by a council, of which Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Henry Lawrence is to be president, and Messrs. John Lawrence and C. G. Mansell, members; that they are to have four commissioners under them, namely, Messrs. R. Montgomery, Edward Thornton, M. P. Edgworth, and D. F. Macleod; and that the following deputy commissioners and assistants are likewise to be appointed, namely, Messrs. Jas. Barnes, F. B. Pearson, and J. R. Carnac, to be deputy commissioners; Mesers. P. Egerton, Forsyth, H. P. Fane, Brereton, Simpson, Henderson, and Macleod to be assistants. Mr. Montgomery to have the Jullundhur Doab, Major Mackeson, Peshawur and the districts beyond the Indus. It is added: "The Governor General has not issued his Proclamation, as yet, annexing the Punjab, but the measures that have already been taken, prove to us that the Punjab is to be annexed, as clearly and as certainly as if we had the proclamation before us." On the other hand, the Bombay Times infers that there is no intention to annex, otherwise the country would have been placed, like Scinde and the Deccan, for a time, under a commissisioner, until arrangements could be made for its management as a British province.

All was quiet throughout India. The King of Oude is said to be so seriously ill, that his ultimate recovery is not expected. From the Nizam's Court the intelligence is, that the Governor-General's letter about the appointment of the new minister Shums-ool-Omra had been received, and it is said to express neither approval nor disapproval, but a hint is given that the debt due by the Nizam to the Company's Government ought to be liquidated.

There is scarcely any intelligence from the Presidencies which calls for notice. Several legislative measures have been published; one for the registration and better regulation of seamen in India; another to enable the Government to dispense with the attendance of civil servants on petty juries.

An action was tried in the Supreme Court at Calcutta, on the 21st March, which is of a class that has created very great interest in the commercial world, both in Calcutta and London—an action upon two of the bills of exchange drawn by the directors of the Bengal Indigo Company. We subjoin an outline of the case from the Hurkaru:—

"The amount of these bills afloat in the end of 1847 was not far short of twenty lakks of rupees. The drawers were the directors and the drawees the trustees of the company, viz. Sir George Larpent, Mr. R. S. Brownrigg, and Mr. John Cockerell, all of whom were present or former partners of the firm of Cockerell, Larpent, and Co. of London, and therefore affected by the failure of that firm. The result of that failure was, that all the Indigo Company's bills then current, came back upon the drawers in Calcutta, some dishonoured for non-acceptance, but the great majority accepted, but protested for non-payment. The Bengal Indigo Company repudiated the whole of the latter, on the ground of an alleged informality in the acceptance, one of the trustees having taken upon himself to accept in the name of all, without (it is said) any authority whatever. The whole of the unaccepted bills, however, were taken up by the drawers, except the two bills to which yesterday's action related. These bills, which were for 5,0001, each, were in the hands of Messrs. Glyn, Hallifax, Mills, & Co., the great London bankers, who claim to be large creditors of the Bengal Indigo Company on other accounts, and (amongst others) upon debentures for a very large amount received by them from the London firm of Cockerell, Larpent, & Co. The company wholly contested the right of Cockerells to pledge these debentures, and contended that Glyns had received them under such circumstances as to acquire no right to recover anything upon them; and on this ground they refused to treat in respect of the bills unless the debentures were given up. Heace arose the action, in which, however, only two main points were raised, viz. first, whether the bills were in form the bills of the company; and secondly, if they were, whether the deed authorized the issuing of such bills, so as to bind the whole company.

were raised, viz. first, whether the bills were in form the bills of the company; and secondly, if they were, whether the deed authorized the issuing of such bills, so as to bind the whole company.

"The Court was of opinion that there ought to be a nonsuit. The plaint averred the bills to have been drawn by the defendants, payable to the order of T. Dickens and F. Bailey (therein described as directors), and to have been indorsed by the said T. Dickens and F. Bailey personally. But in proof of this the plaintiffs had put in two bills of exchange payable to the order of 'ourselves,' i.e. the drawers. If then the defendants (i.e. the Bengal Indigo Company) are the drawers, they also are the persons to whose order the bills are payable, and the plaint should have averred the bills to have been drawn by the defendants, payable to the order of themselves, and not to the order of T. Dickens and F. Bailey. It appeared to the Court that this form was adopted intentionally in order to get rid of the difficulty of the indorsement being made by those gentlemen personally. But the plaintiffs could not be allowed to blow hot and cold. The Court would, however, allow the plaint to be amended by stating the bill payable to the order of the defendants, and that the defendants then indorsed."

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES.

GEVERAL ORDER BY THE RIGHT HON. THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA.

Camp, Ferozepoor, March 17, 1849.

The Governor-General has the utmost satisfaction in directing that the despatches which he has this day received from his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief, and from Major-Gen. Sir Walter Gilbert, x.c.s., be published for the information of the army and of the people of India.

The British subjects who were prisoners in the hands of the enemy have all returned in safety. On the 14th inst., Sirdar Chutter Singh, Rajah Shere Singh, and the principal Sikh sirdars and chiefs, delivered their swords into the hands of Major-Gen. Sir Walter Gilbert. Forty-one pieces of artillery were at the same time surrendered, and the remains of the Sikh army, to the number of 16,000 men, laid down their arms in the presence of the British troops.

The Governor-General offers to his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief, to Major-Gen. Gilbert, and to the whole army, his heartfelt congratulations on this glorious result of the battle of Goojerat, and of the operations subsequent to it, so admirably conducted by the major-general, in fulfilment of his Excellency's instructions.

But the war is not yet concluded; nor can there be any cessation of hostilities until Dost Mahomed Khan and the Affghan army are either driven from the province of Peshawur or destroyed within it. The British army has already resumed its march upon Attock; and the Governor-General confidently hopes, than the entire success which, with God's blessing, will attend it, may enable him soon to announce the restoration of peace-

The Governor-General directs that, in honour of the important events which have now been notified, a salute of twenty-one guns be fired from every principal station of the army in India.

By order of the Right Hon. the Gov.-Gen. of India, (Signed) H. M. Ellior, Secretary to the Gov. of India, with the Gov.-General. From the Commander-in-Chief to the Governor-General of India, &c. &c. &c.

Head quarters, Camp Kullallah, March 16, 1819.

My Lord,—I have the greatest gratification in reporting to your lordship the further happy results of the decisive victory obtained at Goojerat on the 21st ult.

Major-Gen. Sir Walter Gilbert, with that energy and judgment which induced me to select him to conduct the ulterior operations subsequent to that action, has well fulfilled the trust reposed in him, by rapidly pressing the routed enemy, which has led to their unqualified submission, the surrender of their remaining guns, and about 16,000 stand of arms, all of which are now in our possession; and I rejoice to add, that this fortunate consummation has been obtained without a single shot being fired. The whole of the Sikh force with their sirdars have now come in, with the exception of Bhai Maharaj and Colonel Richpaul Singh, who have absconded, but without followers. We have now in our possession fifty-six guns, taken lowers. at Goojerat, and abandoned by the enemy in his retreat on the 21st February; forty surrendered to Major-Gen. Sir Walter Gilbert since that event; twelve captured at Chillianwallah, and fifty at Mooltan; making a total of 158 pieces of ordnance which have fallen into our hands during the present campaign.

(Signed) Gough, General. Head-quarters, Camp Kullallah, March 16, 1849.

No. 282.

From Major-General Sir W. R. Gilbert, K.C.B., commanding Field Force on Special Service, to H. M. Elliot, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India with the Governor-General.

Camp Rawul Pindee, March 14, 1849.

Sir,—Since I addressed you on the 11th inst. from Hoormuch, I have advanced to Rawul Pindee, which place I reached to-day.

I have now the high gratification of reporting for the information of the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India, that the disarmament of the Sikh army, commenced at Manikyala, has been this day completed by the surrender of their swords by the Sikh sirdars, in presence of the commanding officers of divisions and brigades and their staff. The total number of guns surrendered is forty-one, of which a return shall be forwarded hereafter, and the number of stand of arms laid down before the force under my command, is about sixteen thousand. I have, &c., (Signed) W. R. GILBERT, Major-General, Commanding Field Force on Special Service.

Camp Rawul Pindee, March 14, 1849.

India Board, March 21.

The following Despatches, relating to military operations in the Punjaub, have been received at the East-India House:

The Adjutant-General of the Army to the Secretary with the Governor-General.

Camp, Chillianwalla, January 23, 1849.
I have the honour, by direction of his Exc. the Right. Hon. the Commander-in-Chief, to transmit for the information of the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India a copy of a despatch of the 7th inst., from Major-Gen. W. S. Whish, C.B., commanding the Mooltan field force, and of the detailed reports which accompanied it, of the assault upon that city on the 2nd inst.; and I am to add, that his Excellency has instructed me to communicate to the Major-General his cordial approval of the arrangements ordered for the attack, which appears to have been made with a spirit and gallantry highly creditable to the officers and troops of every arm employed.

Major-Gen. W. S. Whish, C.B., commanding Mooltan Field Force, to the Adjutant-General of the Army.

Camp, Mooltan, Jan. 7, 1849.

Having now received the report of the Bombay column, during the assault of the city, on the 2nd inst., I have the honour of forwarding that received from Brigadier Markham on the 3rd inst., and associating with it the letter of this date received from Brigadier the Hon. H. Dundas, C.B., commanding the Bombay division of the field force, both of which I shall be obliged by your submitting to the Right Hon. the Commanderin-Chief.

The steady advance of both columns under their respective commanders, Brigadier Stalker, C.B., and Brigadier Markham (which, as regarded that under the latter, was but temporarily checked from the necessity of entering the city by the left breach), ensured the early realization of what each had been directed to aim at, and by sunset the city was in complete possession of our gallant troops, whose conduct throughout was remarkable for humanity to the unarmed inhabitants they occasionally met, and not less so for the severity with which the opposition of the enemy was overcome from street to street, many of which were narrow and intricate, and several barricaded.

In the letters accompanying, the gallantry and good services of various officers are particularized, and, on the fall of the citadel, it will be my pleasing duty to take up that strain regarding many. It will, however, be better timed now to mention the spirited proposition, on the lst instant, of Lieut. Col. Franks, C.B., to escalade the citadel during the assault of the city, provided I placed 500 of each regiment of the 1st brigade under his command. After due consideration of this suggestion, I deemed it most eligible to forego it, as I had not time to examine into the difficulties that might have attended it; nor would the hour fixed for the assault have been auspicious, unless I had deferred it till dawn of the 3rd.

Brigadier Stalker has brought to Brigadier Dundas's notice the conduct of Colour-Serjeant J. Bennett, 1st fusiliers, on the 2nd inst, and I cannot forbear my testimony to the joyful feelings which it excited in myself, and officers of the staff around me, when noticing his planting the British standard in the crest of the breach, and maintaining it there, in the midst of the mus-ketry fire of the enemy, until the troops had passed.

The troops of the Bombay column suffered much from an explosion, during the night, of a magazine in the city.

I beg to enclose casualty lists, of which the total of each column is as follows:

Grand Total—Killed 30, wounded 218, missing 1. Total 249. Names of Officers wounded.

Bengal Column.—H.M.'s 32nd Foot—Capt. J. D. C. Smyth, slightly; Capt. C. T. King, slightly.

Engineers—Lieut. Garforth, M.B., dangerously.

Bombay Column.—Capt. R. W. Leith (dangerously), Lieut. W. Gray (dangerously), Lieut. E. Dansey, Lieut. G. E. Herne, 2nd-Lieut. E. A. Law, all 1st fusiliers; Lieut. T. S. Warden, 4th rifles; Ens. J. Gordon, 19th N.I.; Lieut. J. A. Fuller, Brigadier F. Markham, commanding 2nd Brigade of Infantry, Mooltan Field Force, to Major-Gen. W. S. Whish, C.B., commanding Mooltan Field Force.

Camp, Mooltan, Jan. 3, 1849.

I have the honour to report, for your information, that, according to division orders, at one o'clock on the 2nd, I proceeded with the brigade under my command to the Mundee Awa, the point of rendezvous, with the left column. At two o'clock we received orders to move to the Delhi gate, from whence the assault was to be made. At a quarter past three o'clock, a salvo being fired from the Delhi gate battery (the signal agreed upon for the assault), the leading companies of H. M.'s 32nd regt. under Capt. Smyth, commanding the grenational content of the same of the bases. the broken ground and ruined out-works of the gate, under a heavy fire of matchlocks, they descended a deep hollow, and found, to their surprise, the city wall in front, about 30 feet in found, to their surprise, the city wall in front, about 30 feet in height, unbreached, and totally impracticable, being fairly concealed from view, from the nature of the ground, until directly upon it. Capt. Smyth immediately, and with great judgment and promptitude, decided upon retiring, and rejoined the column, with the loss of several men, which loss, however, would have been very seriously increased, both to the leading companies and the sellows had these been very seriously increased, but to the leading companies and the sellows had these been are best to the sellows.

nies and the column, had there been any hesitation on his part.
I proceeded at once to the breach at the Khoonee Boorj, which I found had already been entered by the left column, and made our way down the ramparts and streets on our right to the Delhi gate, and from thence to that part of the city close to the Dowlut gate, and directly in front of the fort. The enemy offered considerable opposition in the narrow streets, and on the ramparts, which were strongly barricaded; but the troops carried all before them, and before dark that part of the city was in our possession, and we connected our posts with those thrown out from the left column.

To Col. Brooke, Major Lloyd, and Capt. Lloyd, in command of regiments, and to all under my command, both officers and men, I have to return my thanks for their steadiness and prompt obedience throughout to my orders.

To Major Napier, of the engineers, who accompanied me, P am deeply indebted for the very valuable services he rendered me throughout the afternoon.

Beegee Bagh, Jan. 3, 1849.

I have the honour to report that, in conformity with your instructions to create a diversion on the south and west of the city, preparatory to the storm of the breaches by the regular force, Lieut. Lake threw out a large skirmishing party directly in his front, and close up to the Pak gate, Gen. Cortlandt another on the left of the Daoodpootras, and I a third on the left of Gen. Cortlandt's, thus opening a smart fire nearly down to the Bohur gate, and securing the attention of a large portion of the enemy's soldiers on the walls. In front of the village of Darra, I also moved out a large body of cavalry and a troop of horse artillery, while the remainder and main body of the infantry were in reserve at the Beegee Bagh and See-dee-loll-ke-Bed.

At about half-past one r m. the Daoodpootras, under direction of Lieut. Lake, and my own and Gen. Cortlandt's, under direction of Lieut. Young, of the engineers, Mr. Hugo James, and Mr. Quin, opened their fire from the most advanced suburbs, and drew a smart return from the ramparts and the gun on the Mootee bastion. This was kept up until the advance of the British to the breach, and was, I trust, of service in distracting the enemy's attention.

When the city was completely in your possession, Lieut. Lake and I withdrew our men to their respective posts; but subsequently, on being applied to by Major Scott, of the Bombay engineers, Lieut Lake occupied the Pak gate with Daoodpootras, and a small party from the company of the 3rd Bombay N.I., which was on duty at See-dee-loll. The vigilance of this detachment of Daoodpootras, while in charge of the gate, I was myself a witness to, at night, when I visited the post with Lieut. Lake, and it did great credit to irregular troops. After with-drawing our skirmishers, I ordered the cavalry from Darra to make a patrol to the westward, and they succeeded in intercept-ing a party of the enemy's infantry, who had escaped from the city, twenty of whom they killed, when the rest surrendered, and were disarmed.

I cannot conclude this report without bringing to your notice the zeal of Lieut. Pollock, assistant resident, and Mr. McMahon, a volunteer; the former joined his corps, hearing it was in the storming party at the Delhi-gate breach, and the latter volun-teered to accompany Capt. Smyth, who led the right assault.

Brigadier the Hon. H. Dundas, C.B., H.M.'s 60th Rifles, commanding Bombay Column Mooltan Field Force, to Brevet Capt. G. P. Whish, Assist. Adj. General, Bengal Column.

Camp, Mooltan, Jan. 7, 1849.
I have the honour to forward the report of Brigadier Stalker,

C. B., commanding the 2nd brigade Bombay division, which was engaged in storming the city of Mooltan on the afternoon of the

The brigade, formed in three columns, as directed by the instructions from the Assist. Adj. General, assembled in rear of the Mundee Awa, and, about 3 r.m., moved down to storm the left trench at the angle of the Khoonee Boorj. The storming party, headed by Capt. Leith, of the lat Bombay fusiliers, speedily mounted the breach, but, on arriving at the summit, found some difficulty in descending, the enemy having retrenched the breach, and dug deep ditches, into which several of the lead-ing men and officers fell. The obstacles to the advance of the party having been overcome, the column, having succeeded in passing the trench, pushed on to the ramparts and streets of the town through a very narrow passage, by the aid of some scaling ladders placed against a house by a party of Bengal sappers, under Lieut. Oliphant. I regret to state that, soon after mounting the breach, Capt. Leith was severely wounded, and Lieut. Gray, taking command of the party, moved to the right towards the Delhi gate, to clear away obstacles between the breach and that point at which it was intended the Bengal column should Major Mignan, with the 1st column, moved to the left, clearing the ramparts, while the columns under Major Mant and Major Honner, pushing for the centre of the town, established themselves in the grain market. The narrowness of the streets rendering the preservation of regular formation impossible, the enemy was followed up by the troops in the best mode in which they could move, and without giving him time to halt, until the town was completely carried, and the several columns established; the left having succeeded in reaching the Lahore gate.

Brigadier Stalker speaks most highly of the conduct of the troops, and nothing can be more honourable to their character than the humanity and kind treatment shown by them towards the unoffending inhabitants.

I have great pleasure in bringing to the notice of the Major-General the conduct of Major Mignan, commanding 1st fusiliers; Major Mant, commanding 19th regt.; and Brevet-Major Honner, commanding the 4th N.I. (rifles). Brigadier Stalker also reports most favourably of the conduct of Major Hobson, 1st fusiliers, and of the assistance he received from Capt. Tapp, dep. assist. adj. general, who was unfortunately wounded in capturing a gun; Capt. Hart, major of brigade; Lieut. Pollexfen, dep. assist. qu. master-general, and Lieut. Henry, of the 19th regt. N.I., postmaster to the division. To the commanding engineer, Major Scott, every praise is due for his untiring exertions during the operation; as well as to the several officers of that corps employed with the Bombay division. The conduct of Capt. Leith, Lieuts. Dansey, Daly, Gray, and Mules is particularly noticed by Brigadier Stalker. I am sorry to add that Lieut. Gray was severely wounded after entering the town, and lost his right arm. Lieuts. Dansey, Herne, and Law are also among the wounded, as also Lieut. Warden, of the 4th rifles, and Ens. Gordon, of the 19th regt. N.I.

Several acts of gallantry have been brought to my notice, particularly on the part of Colour-Serjeant Bennett, of the 1st fusiliers, which I shall take an opportunity of reporting to the proper quarter.

The suburbs between the Delhi gate and the left breach were occupied by pickets from the 1st brigade, under Major Dennis, Oth rifles—a company of the 60th rifles, under Capt. Douglas, being stationed in the houses opposite the breach, in the "Khoonee Boorj," to cover the advance of the storming party, and two companies, under Capts. Young and Sibthorpe, to cover the advance of the Bengal column.

Returns of casualties are herewith inclosed.

Brigadier F. Stalker, C.B., commanding 2nd Infantry Brigade, Bombay Column, to the Assist. Adj. General, Bombay Column, Mooltan Field Force. Camp before Mooltan, Jan. 7, 1819.

I do myself the honour to report, for the information of Brigadier the Hon. H. Dundas, C.B., commanding the Bombay column, Mooltan field force, that on the afternoon of the 2nd of January, the brigade under my command was formed in the order laid down for them under cover, within about 200 yards of the breach, the approach to which was fully exposed to a fire from musketry and zumbooruks.

The column gained the top of the breach at about 1 past 3 P.M., with much regularity, under a very galling fire, but, when they reached the summit, found themselves in a sort of inclosure, from which there was only one regular exit, by a narrow lane on the right, and over a low house into the "Khoonee Boorj." The enemy had excavated a trench parallel to the breach, which contracted the space still more; the nature of the ground, therefore, rendered it utterly impossible to preserve any regular formation; and the officers pushed on with the men nearest them, to carry out, as far as possible, the instructions to advance in three columns. The column was detained nearly twenty minutes by the obstacles at the top of the breach. leading column of three companies of the fusiliers, having lost their commander, Capt. Leith, who was dangerously wounded soon after crossing the breach, pushed down the lane to the right, under Lieut. Gray, and was in part the cause of the enemy abandoning the "Khoonee Boorj." It fortunately happened that two short ladders were procured and placed by Bengal sappers, under Lieut. Oliphant, against the house on the left, just as the enemy found their communication with the town threatened; they were therefore obliged to defend both the lane and the tower, and their resistance was consequently less energetic. As soon as the ladders were placed, the column which had to advance by the ramparts to the south, pushed its way along for some distance, but fortunately followed the retreating enemy along one of the streets which eventually led them to the end of the town, near the Lahore gate. A company being left at this point, the column returned along the streets nearest the ramparts to the Bohur gate, where it remained during the night, as it was known that the Pak gate was in possession of the Bengal 72nd, and a company of the 4th rifles was sent back to the Hurun gate. During the night one of the enemy's powder magazines, close to the gateway, blew up, burying several of our men in the ruins. It was impossible to guard against such an accident-indeed it is only surprising it was the only one on the south side; for the enemy's ammunition was lying about in great quantities, and there was nothing to distinguish their magazines from the other houses. In the morning Lieuts. Pollard and Maxwell, with the Bengal sappers, removed a considerable quantity of powder from another magazine, close to a burning house, and threw it over the wall, where it exploded without doing any mischief. The proceedings of the other column were similar: they all pushed quite through the town, left parties in advance posts, and retired to more open ground in the centre of the town.

When the left column, which was intended to go by the ramparts, and leave guards at the gates, had struck into the town, an application was made to Col. Dundas, who sent two companies of H. M.'s 60th rifles, to hold the gates. The other columns had, however, exceeded their instructions; for a company of the 72nd Bengal N.I. had crossed the town, and obtained possession of the Pak, and the road to the Hurun gates, before the 60th rifles arrived. The Puk gate was cleared, during the night, by the Bengal sappers, the Hurun gate by the Bombay sappers, and the Bohur gate was nearly opened, when the explosion took place, which rendered it impossible to go on. It was opened next morning by the Bengal sappers.

It is quite impossible to say where the engineer officers were the troops were so scattered by the narrow lanes that there were no distinct columns. The only real guide was to follow the retreating enemy, which was done. Not only are the ramparts soincomplete as to render a passage round them by a column of men quite impracticable, but the parts which are complete were, at the time of the assault, crossed by traverses, and cut up by small trenches. The night closed before the communication between the different bodies could be effected, but by morning the troops were in communication with each other. It is to be regretted that we had not a couple of hours daylight, as we should then have probably avoided the explosion of the magazine, but the town was as completely cleared of the enemy by dark as it is at the present moment.

The steady and well-directed fire of H. M.'s 60th rifles kept down that of the enemy very considerably, while the troops-were approaching the breach, and a discharge of grape thrown on the top of the breach by Lieut. Keir, Bombay artillery, just over the heads of the fusiliers, as they advanced, was of the utmost advantage to us; but when the top was gained, and our men became mingled with the enemy, the fate of the day depended on the steadiness and courage of the fusiliers, and both men and officers answered nobly to the call.

Where all behaved so well, and the operations were on such an extended scale, it would be impossible for me to particularise each act of gallantry. I would therefore beg to refer the brigadier commanding the division to the report of officers commanding regiments and posts, and merely mention such as came under my notice. The gallantry of the following officers was conspicuous: Capt. Tapp, deputy assistant adjutant-general, attached to my staff, who was wounded in capturing a gun on our first entering the town, whereby I was early deprived of his valuable assistance. Capt. Leith, 1st fusiliers, commanding the storming party, who was very severely wounded; and Lieuts. Daly and Mules, 1st fusiliers. I would also bring to special notice the conduct of Colour-Serjeant John Bennett, 1st fusiliers, who volunteered to accompany the storming party, and rushing up the breach, planted the Union Jack on its crest-standing beside it until the whole brigade had passed. The colour and Major Mignan, commanding 1st fusiliers; Major Mant, commanding 19th regt. N.I.; Major Honner, commanding 4th rifles; and Major Hobson, 1st fusiliers; all of whom exerted themselves to the utmost, and were most successful in their different arrangements. To Major Scott, commanding engineer, I am particularly indebted for his able assistance and untiring zeal, throughout the operations.

My best thanks are also due to the following engineer officers, for the zeal and activity they displayed in the different duties on which they were employed: displayed in the different duties on which they were employed. Capt. Abercrombie and Lieut. Taylor, and other officers of the Bengal engineers, whose names I am unfortunately unable to give; Lieuts. Kendall and Berthon, of the Bombay sappers, and Display and Fuller, of the same corps. To the fol-2nd-Lieuts. Playfair and Fuller, of the same corps. lowing officers temporarily attached to my staff my best thanks are due: Lieut. Pollexsen, dep. assist. qu. master-general; Lieut. Henry, postmaster to the force. I am much indebted to my major of brigade, Capt. Hart, for the able and zealous assistance he afforded me in his arduous office throughout the operations.

I have the greatest pleasure in bearing testimony to the humanity and forbearance of the troops under my command. Not a single instance of wanton cruelty or ill-treatment of the peaceable inhabitants of the town has been brought to my notice.

From Major-Gen. W. S. Whish, C.B., commanding Mooltan Field Force.

Camp, Mooltan, Jan. 21, 1849.

In my letter of the 19th inst. I mentioned having had another messenger from Dewan Moolraj, with a note requesting permission to send a confidential agent to me. In reply, I desired his unconditional surrender at 8 A.M. next day; and when I received the answer from Major Edwardes to sign and send, I took occasion to notice emphatically to the messenger, that I should confine to the guard any men that brought any documents or message from the Dewan, who were not authorized to the above effect. Nothing transpired regarding it yesterday, and I issued the orders for making the assault on both breaches at daylight this morning. The counterscarp on the city side not having, however, been blown in, as was calculated upon, I postponed the attack until 6 a.s. to-morrow. However, at 11 a.s. to-day, just as Major Edwardes had called to speak on matters connected with our march hence, the vakeel who had waited on me on the 9th inst., Dia Bux, came under a guard from our picquets with a letter from the Dewan to each of us, the purport of which was, that he required assurance of his life, and that the females of his family should not be disgraced. I said in reply that, regarding the former, I had only authority to require the Dewan's unconditional submission to the justice of the British Government, and that no stipulation was necessary regarding the latter, for women and children, as a matter of course, would not be molested. Dia Bux then said that his master would certainly come in, and suggested 9 A.M. to-morrow for the time of his doing so; but I could not agree to so late an hour. I told him the fire of all my batteries would continue until 5 o'clock to-morrow morning, and that the Dewan must, at latest, present himself and garrison at the Dowlut gate of the city at sunrise, where arrangements would be ready to facilitate their surrender, and to afford protection to their families.

I will, in conclusion, venture my opinion that the Dewan is now sincere in his desire to submit. His followers are leaving him in large numbers, and our cavalry took prisoners about 300, who stole from the citadel last night; but, if it prove otherwise, I shall have nothing to regret in having attended to a third reference from him for the sake of humanity, and for the welfare of my troops; and the only difference it will make in my arrangements will be, that the assault on the citadel will commence an hour later, and be equally attended, under Providence, with, I trust, complete success.

Major-Gen. Whish, C. B., to the Adj. General of the Army. Camp, Mookan, Jan. 23, 1849.

Although I have in due course taken leave to bring to the notice of the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief, from time to time, the services rendered by the allied troops under Major Edwardes, C.B., assistant resident, as I am about to part with that officer, whose willing and valuable aid I have frequently experienced since our first encamping before Mooltan, I will venture upon the brief recapitulation of what has been done by the forces under him and Lieut. Lake, engineers, respectively; the latter officer having had unassisted charge of the contingent of the Nawab of Bahawulpore until he was wounded on the 12th of September last, when he was for a month believed by Lieut. Taylor, 11th light cavalry, assistant resident, who was prevented from continuing during the siege by a chivalrous expedition he undertook to recover our captives from Peshawur. General Van Cortlandt commanded the regular regiments and artillery of the Durbar, and, as far as came under my observation, executed an arduous task, under occasionally critical circumstances, with much judgment and zeal. Lieut. Lumsden, assistant resident, with a detachment of the guide corps, performed useful service for the two months he was in the allied camp. Lieut. Pollock, 49th regt. N.I., assistant resident has more than once distinguished himself at the head of a detachment during the siege, and joined his corps for the storm of the city on the 2nd inst. Lieut. Young, engineers, had charge of the irregular cappers and miners, and, under the orders of Major Scott, chief engineer, Bombay division, was eminently useful on the line of attack on the city side. Dr. Cole has been, as usual, foremost in the cause of humanity; and, after attending to his own sick, a very large hospital of the wounded of the enemy experienced the benefit of his skill and care.

Before I conclude this brief notice of the officers attached to the allied forces that, exclusive of, on various occasions, having been successfully engaged with the enemy, maintained our communication with the Sutlej and Chenab, and furnished escorts munication with the Sutley and Chenab, and furnished escorts for our supplies, &c., I beg to notice two gentlemen, at present non-military, who have done good service, Messrs. Hugo James and McMahon, volunteers: the former having joined Major Edwardes in the hot season, and thence done duty with three companies of infantry, that he had raised and drilled; the latter having joined early last month, and on the 29th ult. distinguished himself, when the enemy twice unsuccessfully attacked the troops commanded by Major Edwardes and Lieut. Lake, by cutting down the leader of the Sikh infantry in single combat, and by joining the storming column of Brigadier Markham in the assault of the city on the 2nd inst.

As the detachment of Bombay troops under Major Hallett, consisting of five troops of Scinde horse (under Lieuts. Malcolm and Merewether), Capt. Turnbull's light field battery, and 3rd regt. N.I., joined me a fortnight before the main body, and performed, during that time, most useful service, I beg to acknowledge my obligations to Major Hallett for the same.

> Major-Gen. Whish to the Adj. General. Camp, Mooltan, Jan. 23, 1849.

In the haste of despatching to you my letter of yesterday's date, I had not leisure to examine the fair copy previous to signature. I find to-day a clerical error in the omission of Major Day's (of artillery) name immediately before that of Brev. Major Blood, in the fifth paragraph thereof, which I shall be obliged by your causing to be corrected, previous to its transmission to higher authority, should such a measure be deemed suitable.

The Adj. General of the Army to the Secretary with the Governor-General.

Camp, Chillianwalla, Jan. 28, 1819. By direction of the Commander-in-Chief, I have the honour to inclose, for the information of the Governor-General of India, a copy of the despatch of the 22nd* inst. from Major-Gen. W. S. Whish, C.B., commanding the Mooltan field force, reporting the surrender, on the morning of that day, of the garrison and citadel of Mooltan. I am further to add, for communication to his Lordship, that on the receipt of this despatch his Excellency was pleased to issue to the army of the Punjaub an order

(a copy of which is herewith transmitted) expressive of his sense of the great services thus brought to a brilliant and successful termination by the major-general and the admirable troops under his command.

(Then follow "General Orders to the Army of the Punjauh," most heartily congentulating Major-Gen. W. S. Whish, and the brave officers and troops under his command, on the very important success their intrapidity, valour, and exemplary discipline have thus achieved.)

Commander Powell, I.N., commanding the Indus Flotilia, to the Commodore commanding the Indian Navy.

Camp before Mooltan, Jan. 11, 1849. Since the despatch of my letter, dated the 3rd inst., announcing the fall of the city of Mooltan, I have the honour to report that the siege has been carried on against the fort, and that our batteries are now within 180 yards of the ditch. In one of these, mounting seven 18-pounders, the officers and men of the Indian Navy were employed on the 9th, when, unfortunately, fascines, of which the lower part of the battery was formed, took fire by the bursting of one of the enemy's shells. Every exertion was made by Lieut. Berthon, and the officers and men under his command, to extinguish it, but without avail, and it became necessary to move the guns out of the battery into the trench, when the enemy opened a very heavy fire of all arms on them, and I regret to state the men as per enclosed casualty return were wounded, and Mr. Elder, acting master, had his foot crushed by one of the guns, but he is not seriously hurt. It is also my painful duty to report the death of Alexander Johnstone. quartermaster, who died yesterday, a little after noon, of the wounds he received in the morning. This is the same man who was slightly wounded on the 31st ult., and had gallantly returned to duty. The rest of the wounded, I am glad to say, are doing well.

The Comet and Conqueror steamers are still above Mooltan, stopping all water communication. The former vessel will be despatched to Kurrachee in a day or two for Lady Lawrence and her party. The Napier and Meteor are stationed off Raj Ghaut, protecting the bridge and pontoon-boats, also those the siege-train came up in; and the Meeanee is towing up commissariat grain-boats to the same ghaut. The Planet also arrived there yesterday, with two 10-inch mortars, 630 shells, and 44 bales of clothing; she is now having a few repairs made good, and will be held ready for service down river.

It is not yet decided what portion of this f

It is not yet decided what portion of this force is to go to the north-east after the fall of the fort, and I am afraid the flotilla will be able to afford it but very little assistance beyond protecting the boats, and that only to the junction of the Jelum, as the water is lower than I have ever seen it.

List of killed and wounded of the Indian Navy during the siege of the city and fortress of Mooltan.

Alexander Johnstone, quartermaster, slightly wounded, Dec. 31; Henry Sandford, A.B., severely wounded, Jan. 2; John Chandler, A.B., severely wounded, Jan. 9; Henry Jones, A.B., wounded severely, Jan. 9; Alexander Johnstone, quartermaster, wounded, Jan. 10 (since dead); George Elder, acting master, slight contusion, Jan. 9.

Commander Powell, of the Indus Flotills, to the Commodore commanding the Indian Navy.

Mooltan, Jan. 25, 1849.

(Extract.) I have great pleasure in reporting the occupation of the fort of Mooltan, by the troops under Major-Gen. Whish, C.B., on the morning of the 22nd; the Dewan Moolraj, during the night of the 21st, when both breaches had been made practicable, having agreed to an unconditional surrender of himself and garrison, who laid down their arms on the glacis, and marched out at 9.30 A.M. on that date.

During the latter part of the siege, the officers and seamen of the Indian Navy were constantly employed in a battery within the city, in two watches, under Senior Lieut. Berthon and Mr. Acting-master Davis; and the services of all have been very handsomely acknowledged by Brigadier Leeson, commanding the artillery.

The Meteor and Comet steamers left Raj Ghaut on the 14th and 16th inst. for Sinde, the former to bring up treasure from Sukkur, and the latter, with a number of wounded officers, for Kurrachee, where she is to receive on board Lady Lawrence and party, and bring them to Bukree, at the junction of the Sutlej and Chenab rivers. Since the withdrawal of the Comet, the Conqueror has been employed above Mooltan, stopping all communication by the river; but as this is no longer required by the assistant resident, orders were sent yesterday directing Mr. McLaurin to drop down to the junction of the Ravee, and assist in making a bridge of boats over that river. The boats in charge of Mr. Acting Second-master Somerville left Raj Ghaut this morning, accompanied by the Mecanee steamer, with the engineer officers and a company of sappers, who are to make the bridge. The Planet steamer is still at Raj Ghant, where she has been employed with the Napier for some time past in guarding the fleet of boats with Government stores on board, and preventing the enemy crossing the river. The Satellite, Assyria, and Nimrod steamers have been chiefly employed in Lower Sinde, under the orders of Senior Lieut. Drought, who, as well as all the officers in charge of the tenders and their crews, together with the other officers and men of the flotilla, have evinced the greatest zeal in the performance of the arduous duties which have devolved on them during the recent move of the Bombay division to Mooltan; and I beg to submit the enclosed copy of a letter from Brigadier the Hon. H. Dundas, C.B., conveying his thanks to myself, and the officers and men whose services he did me the honour of accepting, which will be duly communicated to them.

Colonel the Hon. H. Dundas, commanding Bombny Column of Mooltan Force, to Capt. Powell, I.N., commanding Detachment of Seamen serving with the Force before Mooltan.

Camp, Mooltan, Jan. 25, 1819.

The operations before Mooltan having been brought to a successful termination, I have the honour to request you will accept for yourself, and convey to the officers and seamen under your command, my thanks for the assistance you so willingly rendered, and the service they gallantly rendered, in serving the batteries, and sharing the fatigues which devolved on the artillery, with the order and intrepidity so truly characteristic of the British sailor.

General Order by the Governor-General of India. Ferozepore, Feb. 1, 1849.

The Governor-General, having received a despatch reporting the surrender on the morning of the 22nd inst. of the citadel and garrison of Mooltan, directs that, together with other despatches relating to the operations against the city and fort, it shall be published for the information of the army and of the people of India.

The capture of this important fortress, which, during a protracted period, has resisted the powerful armament brought against it, and has been defended with gallantry and endurance, is a just subject of congratulation to the Government of India and to the army.

The Governor-General desires to convey to Major-Gen. Whish, C.B., his warmest thanks for the valuable service which has thus, under Providence, been rendered to the Government by the united forces which he commands, for the steady, and skilful, and successful prosecution of a siege which, at comparatively small loss to ourselves, has inflicted most heavy loss upon the enemy, and has utterly destroyed his strongest for-tress. Brigadier Cheape, C.B., the chief engineer of the army, is entitled to the best thanks of the Governor-General for the zeal and ability with which he has fulfilled the important duty intrusted to him, and in the discharge of which he has been well supported by Major Napier, chief engineer of the Bengal division, and Major Scott, chief engineer of the Bombay division of the force. To Brigadier Markham, whose services have been conspicuous; to Brigadier Salter, and to Brigadier Hervey, the Governor-General tenders his warm acknowledgments. Brigadier the Hon. H. Dundas, C.B., commanding the Bombay division; to Brigadier Capon, and Brigadier Stalker, the best thanks of the Governor-General are due, for the ready and effective assistance they have rendered upon all occasions, as well in the attack upon the suburbs, on the 27th of December, as in the assault of the city, which their troops were the first to enter; and in all the subsequent operations of the siege. To Major Garbett and to Major Leeson, commanding the artillery of the Bengal and Bombay divisions; to Commander Powell, of the Indian navy, and to the heads of the various departments, the Governor-General offers his thanks. And to all the troops of each division, European and native; to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men, the Governor-General renders his hearty thanks for the gallantry, perseverance, skill, and discipline which they have displayed throughout the service on which they have been employed. With equal cordiality the Governor-General offers his best thanks to Major Edwardes, C. B., with the irregular force under his orders, and to Lieut. Lake, who has commanded the forces of our ally, the Nawab of Bahawulpore. The Governor-General congratulates these officers on their having been enabled, with their matter troops, to witness, in the capture of Mooltan, the campiles in dication of the supremacy of British power, which during the past summer, their own gallantry and enterprise so materially contributed to sustain.

The Governor-General will have the utmost satisfaction in bringing the services of the force at Mooltan under the favourable consideration of H.M.'s Government and the Hon. East-India Company.

A salute of twenty-one guns has been ordered to be fired at

The Adj. General of the Army to the Secretary with the Governor- General.

Camp, Chillianwalla, Jan. 30, 1849. (Extract.) By direction of the Commander-in-Chief, I have the honour to enclose, for the information of the Governor-General of India, a copy of a despatch of the 21st inst., from Brigadier-Gen. H. M. Wheeler, C.B., commanding the Punjaub division and Jullundur field force, reporting the success of his operations against the rebel Ram Sing.

Brigadier-General M. H. Wheeler, C.B., commanding Jullundur Field Force, to the Adj. General of the Army

Camp, Puttankote, Jan. 21, 1849. (Extract.) On the 8th inst. I marched from Puttankote with my whole force, excepting the 4th regt. N.I. and a ressallah of irregular cavalry, which I sent under the command of Lieut. Col. D. Downing, up the bed of the Chukkee river, to take post at the opposite end of the Dulla mountain, where I had ascertained that the ascent was more facile than near Shahpore. At Shahpore I found that a range of hills was to be crossed to reach Dulla hill, and I hoped to be able to take the troops up the bed of the Ravee, and thus avoid it. On examination, it was found that the fords were too deep, with a violent stream, and I was compelled to turn my attention to a gorge which crossed the intervening hill. This presented great difficulties for guns, but in three days a practicable road was made, under the skilful and indefatigable exertions of Capt. J. R. Oldfield, field engineer, admirably aided by Lieut. M. J. Turnbull, 7th light cavalry, brigade quartermaster, and I had the extreme pleasure of seeing the whole of the artillery pass it and descend into the valley, under the mountain of Dulla. I take this opportunity of expressing my high opinion of both these officers, to whom I am greatly indebted for aiding me in my reconnoissances, and obtaining information.

On reaching the valley, the positions of the enemy were found to be admirably chosen, and I at once saw that a direct attack was out of the question, more particularly as they showed in The 12th, 13th, and 14th, were passed in reconnoitering and obtaining information; and I must acknowledge my obligations to Mr. J. Lawrence, Mr. P. S. Melvill, Lieuts.

Lumsden and Hodson, who aided me most cordially.

On the evening of the 14th, I made the following arrangements:-Lieut. Hodson (Lieut. Lumsden having sprained his ankle), with his corps of guides, to move at noon on the 15th up the right bank of the Ravee, recross the river, and move up to a high peak of the mountain, visible from my camp; with him went 400 rank and file 3rd regt. N.I. I at the same time wrote to Lieut. Col. Downing, that my arrangements were definitively settled, and that the sound of my heavy guns was to be the signal for him to co-operate and attack the enemy's position; but that, as it was possible (owing to the intervening hills), he might not hear them, he was not to delay his ascent beyond 8 o'clock A.M. of the 16th. Another column was formed of the head-quarters 3rd regt. N.I., and a party of the 2nd irregular cavalry (Capt. Jackson having volunteered the services of his corps, dismounted), under Lieut. Swinton, 2nd in command; the whole under Major Butler, commanding 3rd regt. N. I. Mr. Lawrence, on joining me, brought with him a party of the 16th irregular cavalry and 1st Sikh local infantry: the former the head-quarters and 60 sowars; the latter, under Lieut. J. Peel, second in command, 152: the whole under the command of Capt. W. W. Davidson, of the former, who volunteered for his sowars to act on foot. These were formed into another column to join that under Major Butler, when he passed that point of the hill where it ascended. Lieut. Hodson quitted camp at 12 at noon on the 15th, and at 2 r.m. rain began to fall, slightly at first, but it increased and poured all night, and fell more or less until past 1 r.m. of the next day. This so greatly interfered with his progress, the road being a most difficult path over cliffs, and the Ravee having swollen, he was unable to reach his post until noon on the 16th, instead of 6 r. sr. on the 15th, as reckoned on. Of this he could give me no intimation, in consequence of the weather preventing any one from coming round, and the occupation of the mountain by the enemy equally preventing any one from coming across. All were ready in my camp at 8 A.M., and, although it poured, moved off in capital spirits to be ready to ascend at the signal.

Lieut. Col. Wilson has written so modestly of the artillery, that it is my duty to state, that his own exertions, and that of all under him, were most zealous and successful. Capts. Sissmore and Burnett deserve the greatest credit for getting up 24pound howitzers and mortars on steep shoulders of the hill, and bringing them to act on the positions of the enemy. These officers have, on every occasion, elicited my praise, and I beg mostly strongly to recommend them to the favourable consideration of Lord Gough. The column under Major Butler carried out my wishes with great coolness and courage, and I am indebted to that officer for the judgment which he evinced, and which was crowned with complete success. The enemy has lost severely; thirty-five bodies were counted, and many more must have fallen on different parts of the hill, which have not been seen. Of their wounded I know nothing. Major Fisher and Capt. Jackson, with the mounted portions of their corps, followed me up the mountain,—where, I'll venture to say, cavalry never were before,—in the hope of being able to pursue the enemy when beaten, but did not reach in time.

I have had on this, as indeed on every other, occasion the most hearty and cheerful aid from the staff of all grades, the whole of whom accompanied me. I received the most cordial aid in all points from Mr. Lawrence and Mr. Melvill, and am most grateful to those gentlemen. I am, in a word, pleased with all, and of all ranks, who were under my personal com-

General Order by the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India.

Camp, Mukkoo, Jan. 24, 1849.

The Governor-General having received from the Commanderin-Chief a despatch, dated the 16th inst., directs that it shall be published for the information of the army and of the people of India.

In this despatch, his Exc. reports the successful operation of the troops under his immediate command on the afternoon of the 13th inst., when they attacked and defeated the Sikh army under the command of Rajah Shere Sing. Notwithstanding great superiority in numbers, and the formidable position which he occupied, the enemy, after a severe and obstinate resistance, was driven back, and retreated from every part of his position in great disorder, with much slaughter, and with the loss of twelve pieces of artillery.

The Governor-General congratulates the Commander-in-Chief on the victory thus obtained by the army under his command; and, on behalf of the Government of India, he desires cordially to acknowledge the gallant services which have been rendered on this occasion by his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief, the generals, the officers, non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the army in the field.

The Governor-General offers his thanks to Major-Gen. Sir Joseph Thackwell, K.C.B. and K.H., for his services; and to Brigadier White for his conduct of the brigade of cavalry on the left. Major Gen. Sir W. Gilbert, K. C. B., and Brigadier-Gen. Campbell, C.B., are entitled to the special thanks of the Governor-General, for the admirable manner in which they directed the divisions under their orders. To Brigadier Mountain, C. B., and to Brigadier Hoggan, the Governor-General tenders his acknowledgments for the gallant example they offered in the lead of their men; and to them, to Brigadier Godby, C.B., and Brigadier Pennycuick, C.B., for their able conduct of their respective brigades. The warm thanks of the Governor-General are due to Brigadier-Gen. Tennant, commanding the artillery division, to Brigadier Brooke, C.B., and Brigadier Huthwaite, C.B., for their direction of the operations of that distinguished. arm, and for the effective service which it rendered. heads of the various departments, and to the officers of the general and personal staff, whose services are acknowledged by the Commander-in-Chief, the Governor-General offers his thanks. The Governor-General deeply regrets the loss of Brigadier Pennycuick, C.B., and of the gallant officers and men who have honourably fallen in the service of their country. It has afforded the Governor-General the highest gratification to observe, that the conduct of the troops generally was worthy of all praise.

The Governor-General, indeed, is concerned to think that any order, or misapprehension of an order, could have produced the movements, by the right brigade of cavalry, which his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief reports.

To the artillery, European and native, to the cavalry on the left, and to the European and native infantry, the Governor-General offers his hearty thanks; especially to those corps, European and native, which his Excellency reports to have acted, under trying circumstances, with a gallantry worthy of the greatest admiration.

The Governor-General will have sincere satisfaction in bringing the services of this army under the favourable notice of H. M.'s Government and the Hon. East-India Company.

A salute of 21 guns has been ordered to be fired from every principal station of the army in India.

The Governor-General repeats to the Commander-in-Chief, and to the army, the assurance of his cordial thanks; and expresses his confident belief that the victory which, under Divine Providence, they have won, will exercise a most important influence on the successful progress of the war in which they are engaged.

The Secretary with the Governor-General to the Adjutant-General of the Army.

Ferozepore, Jan. 31, 1849.

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief's despatches, dated the 5th, 10th, and 16th ult., reporting the particulars of an action with the enemy at Sadoolapore, and the passage of the Chenab, by Major-Gen. Sir Joseph Thackwell, K.C.B.

The Governor-General regrets to find that he inadvertently omitted to issue instructions founded on a minute which he had recorded on the subject of the despatches under acknowledgment. His Lordship begs to congratulate the Commander-in-Chief on the success of the measures which he adopted for effecting the passage of the Chenab, and to convey to him the assurance of his satisfaction with, and his best thanks for, the judicious arrangements by which he was enabled, with comparatively little loss, to carry into execution his plans for the passage of that difficult river, and for compelling the retreat of the Sikh army from the formidable position which they occupied on its further bank, after they had been engaged, and beaten back, by the forces under Major-Gen. Sir Joseph Thackwell. sult of his Excellency's movements, in driving the Sikh army from their entrenchments, and forcing them to retire on the other extremity of the Dooab, was of much importance.

The Governor-General offers his best thanks to Major-Gen. Sir Joseph Thackwell for his successful direction of the force under his command, and for the dispositions by which he compelled the enemy to retire, and ultimately to quit the ground he had occupied. The Governor-General tenders his best thanks to Brigadier-Gen. Campbell for the able assistance which he rendered to Major-Gen. Sir Joseph Thackwell, and to Lieut. Col. Grant for the powerful and effective use which he made of the artillery under his command.

The Governor-General has had much gratification in observing the terms in which the Commander-in-Chief has spoken of the army under his command in the field; and he concurs with his Excellency in bestowing upon them the praise which is their

The Mesmeric Hospital.—The first half yearly report of the Mesmeric Hospital has been published. It is a very interesting document. From the abstract statement appended to it, it appears that the number of mesmeric operations performed during the six months has been 31, of "minor miscellaneous operations," 278, of dispensary patients prescribed for, 455, while the average monthly expenditure has been only Rs. 285.

John Anderson, and the fourth by the appointment of Capt. Swinley to be asst. adjutant general of artillery, in the room of Lieut.—Col. Lawrenson, promoted. The first has already been conferred on Capt. Kinleside, while for the three others, no appointment has as yet been made. It is surmised, however, and we believe correctly, that two will fall to the lot of Capts. Austin and J. D. Shakespear, and that the fourth will be bestowed on Capt. G. L. SERIOUS DISTURBANCE AT BARRACKPORE. - There has been for some days at Barrackpore considerable excitement in consequence of a quarrel which has broken out among the troops stationed there. It appears that certain sepoys of the 16th were ordered out of the lines of the 35th, and they in revenge during the night killed two recruits of the latter regt. A strong jealousy has always existed between them, and this blew the spark into a Various rencontres have taken place, in which some six or eight men have been slain, and it is feared that more serious consequences may follow, as the regiments, the 16th in particular, are much exasperated. Yesterday a bheesty was killed at the tank, apparently for no conceivable reason. The best plan in all such cases is to separate the regiments at once. Ill blood among natives seldom cools, and it is to be feared that there will be constant repetitions of the same, if not of worse scenes, till one of the parties is removed. The men are at present afraid to approach each other, and pickets have been stationed at all points, in hourly apprehension of an outbreak. An order from the brigadier, to march one of the two parties to Calcutta, or Dum-Dum, may prevent a serious quarrel, which would bring discredit upon the Government. - Friend of India.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A New Steamer has been started between Madras, Ganjam, and Bombay. This is the first time Madras has started a steamer of her own.

A LARGE METEOR was seen over Kilpauk last Monday evening, March 5th, near eight o'clock. The crescent moon, and the planet Venus near it, were going down in a dull haze, when suddenly a brilliant light shone out beneath them. It lasted a few seconds, then fell in fragments, as it seemed, near Col. Pratt's residence, but possibly further to the westward. It was not dissimilar in appearance to the artificial electric light, and may be taken as a further indication of the surcharged state of the atmosphere. - Calculator.

A LETTER from Arcot mentions that cholera, measles, and small-pox are prevalent there at present among the natives. Dr. Mackintosh, of the 1st Cavalry, cured a bad case of spasmodic cholera with chloroform the other day. The man was brought into hospital in the evening, and was quite well the following morning .- United Service Gazette, March 23.

NEW BARBACK AT PERAMBORE.—We understand that the Court of Directors have sanctioned the proposed estimate of 90,000 rupees for raising the site of the barracks at Perambore, but if it were not improper to doubt, we should feel almost inclined to question the wisdom of "the constructive department" of the Madras Government, in advising such an outlay for such a purpose. It would have been much better had the locality of the cantonment been changed to Kilpauk, as at first proposed. The works will be commenced as soon as the contracts can be made, a task, of all others, the heaviest in this country.—Athenæum, March 20.

BOMBAY.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAIL of February 24 reached Bombay March 30. A MAGNIFICENT FIRE-BALL was seen at Bombay on the 19th, and appears to have burst near Aurungabad; it was visible over a space of nearly 300 miles from north to south, and as much more from east to west.

LORD AND LADY FALKLAND left Bombsy on the evening of the 23rd of March, at six o'clock, for the hills, on board the steamer Medusa. His lordship left the Apollo Bunder under a salute of nineteen guns—the same compliment being paid him from the Hastings and Cambrian, as the steamer seased them. The Right Hon. the Generator is accompanied by Mr. A. Malet, and Colonel P. M. Melvill, secretaries in the political and secret, and military and marine, departments, and secretaries in attendance. From Mahabuleshwur the Governor will proceed in May to Poons, where his lordship will remain during the monsoon, and return to the presidency about the end of September. It is said that the arrangements for the annexation of Sattara will be immediately entered on by Lord Falkland, on his reaching the hills .- Bombay Times.

SIR WILLOUGHBY COTTON and the General Staff left Bombay for the Mahabaleshwar hills March 25.

THE BARQUE Colchester, of Liverpool, Commander Withers, bound to Maulmain, frem Adea, struck on Rathowhaff Point on the lat of April about midnight. The weather was very thick at the time. The vessel was deserted next day about ten o'clock, and all hands proceeded in boats to Aden. The Colchester was bumping on the rocks for ten hours before she made a drop of water, when she became a total wreck. The commander, carpenter, and two apprentices, are at Aden; the rest came round to Bombay by the H. C. steamer Victoria.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

THE lexicography of the Chinese is a part of their literature which has been hitherto very imperfectly explored, yet, with reference to so peculiar a language as that of China, native dictionaries are of great importance, not merely to enable Euro-peans to comprehend fully the force and meaning of the characters, but to mark the changes they have undergone in form and signification at different periods. The Chinese Repository, for September, 1818, supplies a list of the titles of the principal Chinese dictionaries from a work published in China by imperial authority, and the European reader will be surprised to hear, and perhaps disinclined to believe, that the list in the original work, accompanied with a general summary of each dictionary, its date, and the name of the author, fills four volumes, and that the number of dictionaries is two hundred and eighteen. Several of them date so far back as the Han dynasty; others were composed in the Tang, Wei, Sung, and Yuen dynasties; the majority are of the Ming and the reigning Manchu dynasties; some of the latter having been compiled by imperial authority in the reigns of Kang-he and Keen-lung. One of the dictionaries is recorded in the original list as having been made by an European, named Kinnikoh, under the Ming dynasty, which ruled China from A.D. 1368 to 1644.

The origin of the practice in China of compressing the feet of females has been ascribed to Tan-ke, an infamous empress, B.C. 1100, who was born with club-feet, and, having great influence with the emperor, she induced him to issue an edict, adopting her feet as the model of beauty, and requiring the compression of infant females' feet so as to conform to that model. This is not only an improbable account, but, as the custom is not mentioned in any of the classical books, it is not likely that it existed in the time of Confucius. Another account refers the practice to the example of Pwan, a concubine of the emperor Yang-te, of the Suy dynasty, A.D. 605. The custom is generally understood to be of still later origin, and to have owed its introduction to the whim of Le-yuh, the licentious and unpopular prince of Keang-nan, whose court was at Nan-king, and who ruled from A.D. 961 to 976, having been subdued and poisoned by the founder of the Sung dynasty. It is said that he was amusing himself in his palace, when he indulged the freak of having the feet of a favourite concubine "improved," by being bent, so as to raise the instep into an arch, to resemble the new moon. The form was much admired by his courtiers, who began to introduce it into their families. Soon after, the province of Keang-nan becoming again an integral part of the empire, the new practice gradually spread amongst all ranks until it became a national custom. Those females whose feet had not been bound were sacrificed by their mothers-in-law, or, being despised by their husbands, committed suicide. About 150 despised by their husbands, committed suicide. About 150 years after the origin of this practice, we find a Chinese poet celebrating the beauty of the "Golden Lilies," which he makes six inches long, whence it would appear that, six centuries ago, the model foot was of the same size as at the present day. According to the theory of Lord Monboddo and M. Lamark, such continued compression for centuries would have occasioned a material alteration in the structure of Chinese feet; but this is not the fact, for, until the females attain their seventh or ninth year, when the painful process of bandaging commences, the feet are perfectly natural, both in size and figure. The practice has been condemned by several Chinese writers, and it has been sometimes partially suspended; but habit, co-operating with vanity, amongst such a people as the Chinese, has been too strong for nature. The practice causes sometimes the loss of strong for nature. The practice causes sometimes the loss of the feet. In the Report of the Canton Hospital, by Dr. Parker, published in the Chinese Repository for March, 1848 (from which work most of the previous facts are taken), amongst a variety of very curious cases treated at that excellent institution is that of an interesting little girl of Honan, seven years of age, whose feet were compressed, in the usual mode, but, at the end of a fortnight, her sufferings became insupportable, and the parents reluctantly removed the bandages, when the toes were found to be discoloured, and she was brought to the hospital. Gangrene had then extended to the whole of the left foot, which separated in a few days, and in about ten days, the right also. Dr. Parker states that he has heard, on good authority, of several similar cases resulting from this barbarous and absurd prac-

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

THURSDAY, May 3, 1849.

THE 24th of April, 1849, was a proud day for the Indian army, when, in both Houses of Parliament, and in the Hall of the East-India Company, its heroic deeds were the theme upon which the eloquent delighted to dwell. In the House of Peers, the public sentiment found the fittest interpreter in the first warrior of the age,—a soldier who in India commenced that career of glory which he consummated at Waterloo. A brief summary of the tributes paid to the victors at Goojerat and at Mooltan will show that, looking at their exploits from different points of view, the speakers all concurred in one general harmony of praise.

The Marquess of Lansdowne, in a speech equally distinguished by clearness of detail and elegance of diction, commemorated in a particular manner the services of the subaltern officers in the Punjab campaign, with which he acknowledged he had been deeply struck, who had displayed not only the gallantry of the British soldier, but a skill which demands high qualities of mind and judgment, in dealing with the passions and prejudices of the natives of India. Lord Stanley joined in the expression of public gratitude to the gallant men who had upheld the military reputation of England and promoted her interests and honour in remote regions. But the speech of the Duke of Wellington, whilst it evidently attracted most attention in the House, upon such a topic, must no doubt be read with peculiar interest by the country.

His Grace declared that he had, as a matter of duty, been called to consider and appreciate the difficulties under which the war in the Punjab had been conducted; and he confessed he had never seen stronger instances of good conduct; particularly mentioning the operations of Major-General Whish before Mooltan, and his expeditious movement to support Lord Gough upon the Chenab. As a military man and the Commander-in-Chief, the Duke was bound to notice the unfortunate retrogression of the 14th Dragoons, a matter into which, he said, an inquiry had been made; whence it appeared that the commander of the brigade having been wounded in the head and the officer next in rank being at a distance, the word of command was given by some unauthorized person, "of whom no trace can be found," and "some confusion took place." This may happen, he said, to any troops, and, the character of soldiers must not be taken from "scraps in the newspapers," for which, and we fear their conductors, this illustrious personage seems to entertain no great respect. The Duke highly eulogized the conduct of Major Edwardes, and drew the attention of the House to the corps of Scinde Horse, raised by Sir Charles Napier, expressing his surprise that they could be put in line to meet the formidable cavalry of the Sikhs and Affghans.

The Duke of Richmond gave testimony, from personal knowledge, in favour of the regiment of dragoons, and of the two gallant officers of that corps who fell at Ramnuggur; and noticed the compliment which was paid to the Indian army by the presence of so many peers, to evince "the gratitude of that House to the men who had so well and so nobly maintained the honour and glory of the British army." He was followed by two ex-Governors-General of India, Viscount Hardinge and the Earl of Ellenborough, the former of whom referred specially to the "admirable conduct" of the artillery at the battle of Goojerat, which had been so effectually employed, he observed, that "the Sikh artillery was defeated without its being necessary for the infantry to fire in line, and, with the exception of two regiments of Europeans and four of native infantry, not a single regiment fired a shot." This, by the way, confirms the accuracy of the "newspaper scraps," which stated that the battle was "chiefly an artillery affair." This circumstance, Lord Hardinge added,

"Was most creditable to the Indian artillery, which was of the most splendid character, and second to none that he had ever seen; it was the instrument by which Lord Gough had gained one of his best and most splendid victories. The statement of Lord Gough was, that the heavy artillery, the 18-pounders, were moved and handled with the ease of field-guns. He (Viscount Hardinge) had seen the same thing, because these 18-pounders were, during the aperations on the Sutlej, drawn each by two elephants in harness, which carried those guns during the whole of that campaign over every sort of ground, without, too, causing any impediment or any delay to the infantry. That campaign of 1846 was the first occasion on which the 18-pounders were so conveyed, and they came up from Delbi, a distance of 300 miles, without impeding the infantry, or giving them any trouble. Such a sight had never been seen in India before."

Lord Hardinge added his testimony to the merits of Major Edwardes, with whom, he said, he had had some conversation in India, and "found him a most clever and sensible young man." The merits of the young officers in the East-India service were very highly eulogized by this noble lord, an excellent judge of military talents; he observed that "there was no service in the world which possessed more able and active officers than were the young men who were sent out on the East-India Company's service." Lord Hardinge coincided in the encomium pronounced by the Dukes of Wellington and Richmond upon the 14th Light Dragoons, remarking that that gallant corps had been placed in difficult circumstances; that the matter had been sufficiently explained, and that, when that explanation was known, there was nothing to hurt the reputation of the corps.

The only speaker in the House of Peers who deviated from military into civil topics, and from the past into the future, was Lord Ellenborough, who, with something approximating to criticism, professing to "say nothing of the past," added,

"He would not inquire how far, under the last treaty of Lahore, it might have been possible for us to prevent the growing up of a numerous, well-appointed, well-disciplined, and well-prepared army of Sikhs, openly to contend with us on the fields of the Punjab in doubtful contest, without suffering from us an ignominious defeat. But this he did say with confidence, after the experience they had had, that it would be the most utter and shamcless fatuity to place trust hereafter in Sikh chiefs or Sikh troops; and he trusted that the Government would not again permit the consolidation of hostile strength capable of contending with us."

His lordship adverted to the responsibility attached to our present position, as now "the sole military power in India, capable of controlling all things by our own single strength;" and to the dangers, equal in amount to, though different in character from, those attached to our past position, and he inculcated the policy of not adding to those dangers by blindly permitting the reconstruction of an army we had twice had to subdue. "Let not pusillanimity," he said, "be in our councils, to deprive us of the result of victory in the field—let us not again permit the formation of an army to contend for the dominion we had twice won; and in that contest let us not risk again, as we had done, our present position and empire."

In the Commons, the President of the India Board gave a more circumstantial narrative of the campaign in the Punjab, which he prefaced by a reference to a remarkable prediction contained in the notes to Dr. Robertson's Dissertation upon India, that the Sikhs were the nation with whom the final struggle for the dominion of India would take place. Sir John Hobhouse read some highly interesting letters from the camp, recording curious incidents relative to the battle of Goojerat. An aide-de-camp writes: - " A splendid regiment of regular horse, headed by an Affghan chief, one of Dost Mahomed's nephews, came down to the attack, and were charged by a wing of the Scinde Horse and a squadron of the 9th Lancers in the most gallant style. They met us, and were cut down and driven back like sheep, their chief and a host of others killed." Speaking of the feats of the artillery, Sir John says :-

"Addiscombe has reason to be proud of her scholars. I find that all the 100 guns were manned by Addiscombe pupils; and these hundred guns kept up for three hours a continual fire from field batteries and heavy guns; not from one fixed position merely, for they continued to advance as the Sikhs retired and took up fresh positions. This, of course, was calculated to check the severity of their fire, yet, on an average, they discharged no less than forty rounds in an hour, which I find was the average of firing at Waterloo."

He mentions a remarkable incident which took place in reference to Lord Gough himself:—

"Thirty Affghan horsemen, armed in mail, were appointed with orders to capture Lord Gough. Watching their opportunity, they made a dash, and were met by the body-guard, commanded by Leut. Stannus. Our men, finding their swords made no impression, sheathed them, and took to their firearms, and a hand-to-hand conflict ensued, which ended in the destruction of the Affghans, one man excepted."

Sir Robert Peel bore strong testimony to the character and merits of Lord Gough, and he remarked that great exploits had been performed, not by veterans inured to the service, but by young men, assuming great responsibilities, and giving examples worthy of the name of Englishmen. "When such things are done by the aged, and such examples are set by the young," said the right hon. baronet, "I never will despair of the security of our Indian empire."

Sir James Hogg said a more complete victory than that of Goojerat was never obtained; the retreat was almost immediately converted into a flight, and the Sikh soldiers flung away their armour, and even their uniform, that they might escape detection. "If the House," he said, "desired further proof how complete and final this victory was, and how little chance or possibility there was of the Sikhs ever reassembling in force to contend with the British army, they had it in Lord Gough's applying to be relieved from his office of Commander-in-Chief, which he would assuredly not have done if more remained to be done."

The lustre of this great and decisive victory seems to have shed an illumination over all portions of the campaign, and we shall not undertake the invidious and ungrateful office of pointing out the dark spots. A campaign must be judged of as a whole, and if the end is fully accomplished, minute criticism upon isolated parts is seldom acceptable, and not always just.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT. House of Lords, April 24.

The Marquess of Lansdowne moved that the thanks of the House be presented to the Governor-General of India, the Commander-in-Chief, and the officers and soldiers of the army in India, for their services in the late actions. In the course of a very eloquent speech he recapitulated the train of events which had rendered a series of military operations inevitable in the Punjab, and touching lightly on the earlier parts of the campnign, called the attention of the House to its brilliant termination by the capture of Mooltan and the crowning victory of Goojerat.

Lord Stanley had the gaeatest pleasure in seconding the motion, because he wished it to appear that, on such an occasion, party spirit had no power, and that every one in that House was anxious to do honour to those gallant soldiers who had contributed so much to sustain the glory of their country abroad.

The Earl of Galloway having recommended the celebration of the victory by a day of general thanksgiving,

The Duke of Wellington addressed the House with great energy and earnestness. It had fallen to his lot to know and to consider the great difficulties under which the war had been conducted, and he could therefore bear testimony to the ability with which the combinations had been carried out which had resulted in the triumphant victory upon which they were now called to pronounce their approbation. The success that had attended the operations of Gen. Whish and Col. Dundas against Mooltan was the first point which called for the thanks of the House, and though some untoward accidents, which it was impossible to avoid, had attended the earlier actions of Lord Gough, the result of the whole series of operations had been brilliant in the extreme. The noble duke also expressed h s admiration at the conduct of Major Edwardes and those young officers who, he was happy to say, had immortalized themselves in the late campaign; and having called the attention of the House to the effective service rendered by the Scinde Horse in the battle of Goojerat, he sat down reiterating his hearty concurrence in the vote of thanks

The Duke of Richmond, Lord Hardinge, and the Earl of Ellenborough also spoke in approbation of the vote of thanks, and the resolutions in which it was embodied were then agreed to.

House of Commons, April 24.

Sir J. Hobhouse moved a vote of thanks to the Governor-General of India, the Commander-in-Chief in India, the General and other officers, non-commissioned officers, and men, engaged in the recent operations in the Punjab, in the battle of Goojerat, and at the siege of Mooltan. He observed that, acquainted as we had become with the Sikh people, it was superfluous to preface his motion by any preliminary remarks upon the character of that people, with whom it had been long foreseen that the great struggle for dominion in India would take place. It was due to the Sikhs to say that they had contended against us with an energy, a courage, and a perseverance worthy of a better end and of a better cause. Sir John took a rapid glance at the relations established by Lord Hardinge between the British Indian Government and the state of Lahore; the new arrangements subsequently entered into, the treacherous murder of Mr. Vans Agnew and Lieut. Anderson, men of the highest hope and promise; the revolt of the Dewan of Mooltan, and the general insurrection which followed. He then gave a brief narrative of the early exploits of Major Edwardes and Lieut. Lake; the expedition againt Mooltan under General Whish; the events which delayed its operatious; the march of the Bengal and Bombay divisions to reinforce the besieging army; and the promptitude with which General Whish resumed operations against Mooltan, which was taken by storm, whereby, according to the Duke of Wellington, the great object of the war was accomplished. Sir John then took up the proceedings of Lord Gough against the Sikh army under Shere Singh, who had separated from Moolraj and collected a formidable force of 35,000 men upon the Chenab, whilst Chuttur Singh had broken into Peshawur, and the Sikh troops in Bunnoo revolted. He then described the march of Lord Gough to the Chenab; the expulsion of Shere Singh from his post upon that river, and his retreat upon the Jhelum; the bloody battle of Chillianwallah, and the concentration of the Sikh army at Russool, where it was joined by Chuttur Singh. A new cause of apprehension now arose; the Affghans took the field. Dost Mahomed Khan had unfurled the green banner on the banks of the Indus, in cooperation with the Sikh army, then numbering 60,000 men. Whilst Shere Singh with his large force was meditating a movement across the Chenab upon Lakore, by a most fortunate circumstance, showing the judgment which had dictated the arrangements, and the celerity with which they had been executed, this movement was defeated by the appearance of the advanced force of General Whish's army, which had accomplished a march of twenty-one days in seventeen, arriving on the left bank of the Chenab at the critical moment to prevent the passage of the Sikhs. Sir J. Hobhouse then read some highly interesting details of the battle of Goojerat, which the Governor-General had characterized as one of the most memorable ever fought by British troops in India. After a tribute to the merits of the officers who had distinguished themselves in action, and others employed upon detached services, and to the memory of those who had fallen, he closed his speech with an animated panegyric upon Lord Gough.

The Marquis of Granby seconded the motion.

Sir R. Peel, in a few words, expressed his cordial concurrence in the vote, and bore testimony to the merits and services of Lord Gough, who had four times received the thanks of this house, Hc (Sir R. Peel) had never doubted that the campaign would redound to the honour of Lord Gough, and would give new security to the British power; and he rejoiced, not only at the glorious termination of the campaign, but that great exploits had been performed, not only by veterans, but by young men, who had nobly discharged the responsibilities cast upon them. Whilst such acts were performed by the aged, and such examples set by the young, he should not despair of the permanence of the British power in India.

Sir J. W. Hogg, observing that a more complete victory than that of Goojerat had never been fought, panegyrized the conduct of Lord Gough, and gave some further details respecting Lahore politics. He distinguished between the Sikh troops under the mutinous sirdars and the four regiments placed under British officers, not a man of which had joined the insurgents; and he expressed his belief that the Sikhs, so officered and well treated, would make able, zealous, and faithful soldiers.

Sir R. Inglis concurred in the vote, and hoped that some further marks of royal approbation would be bestowed upon Lord Gough.

Mr. Hume complained of the limitation of the number of the Company's officers admitted to the honours of the Bath.

Some explanations were given by Sir J. Hobhouse and Lord John Russell upon this subject; and after a few remarks from Mr. Mangles, Mr. Grattan, and Colonel Dunne, and a warm eulogium upon the character and conduct of the Earl of Dalhousie from Sir R. Peel, the several resolutions were agreed to nem. con.

EAST INDIA HOUSE

A Special General Court of Proprietors of East-India Stock was held on the 24th April, to consider the propriety of passing votes of thanks to the Governor-General, the Commander-in-Chief, and the officers and men of the army in India, for their services in the recent military operations in the Punjab. The chair was taken by Major-General Sir Archibald Galloway, Chairman of the Court of Directors.

The Chairman.—It is a peculiar pleasure to me, at this early period of my duty in this chair, to have the honour to announce to you the achievement of a great and decisive victory by our army under our Commander-in-Chief, Lord Gough, on the 21st of February last, over the combined forces of the Sikhs and Affghans, near the town of Goojerat, in the Punjab. Gentlemen, it will be my duty to propose to you resolutions embracing votes of thanks to our Governor-General, the Commander-in-Chief, the generals and officers, both European and native, and the non-commissioned officers and privates, who in their several stations contributed to the attainment of this great and decisive This is the sixth time in which you have assembled to perform the agreeable duty of returning your thanks to the Indian army for their gallant and great services within a period of ten years. The Indian army have won for you an empire, and earned for themselves imperishable renown. Governor-General our thanks are particularly due for the zeal and ability with which he applied the resources of the British empire in India to the prosecution of the war in the Punjab, by which means an army was assembled, which, whether we consider its numerical strength, its composition, or its equipment, has certainly never been surpassed in any period of our Indian history. An army of 25,000 men was assembled and encamped on the banks of the Indus-a spectacle of which the British power in India—nay, even yourselves, may be justly proud; but when that army was assembled, not for the purpose of aggressive war, but for the purpose of humbling an ungrateful and treacher-ous enemy, surely your pride may be more than usually elated. It was this army, under the personal command of Lord Gough, which overthrew, with irretrievable destruction, the army of the Sikhs, consisting of 60,000 men, with sixty pieces of cannon. It is hardly necessary for me, in this assembly, to call to your re-collection the distinguished services of Lord Gough. The history of this country and of his military achievements contain a sufficient monument of those services in every quarter of the globe. But it is with his services in the eastern hemisphere that we have to do. China submitted to his powerful arm; but it is to the services in India of our noble Commander-in-Chief that I wish to call your particular attention. Lord Gough has fought and conquered in no less than six general actions—six great battles. These have been the fruits of his glorious persegreat battles. verance and his energetic gallantry. And, in resigning into your hands the command which he has with so much glory to himself held, he has placed on record a battle-a model of a battle-a battle which will prove a model to the gallant army he has so often led-it is an example of the practical exactness of science united with discipline and unflinching courage, which exhibits in a striking light the tremendous efficiency of the Indian It is a peculiarly satisfactory part of the carcer of Lord Gough that this glorious victory was gained at a comparatively small cost. It was, nevertheless, of the most decisive character, because it showed clearly to the presumptuous enemy that he was entirely unable to stand on equal terms for one moment before us. Thousands of his men were slain on the field of battle-his guns, ammunition, and his entire camp-not merely the camp equipage-were left in our hands, and so complete was their defeat and dispersion that they were seen throwing away their arms and clothes in order to disguise themselves and escape pursuit. Never was there a more complete proof of the decision, energy, and efficiency of our army in India. Such was the result of this great battle, and I feel assured that, while our thanks are justly due to the Governor-General, you will come forward and with the utmost cheerfulness tender your thanks to Lord Gough for his most conspicuous and distinguished ser-I have also to bring to your notice the distinguished services of the generals and other officers, both native and European, belonging to our army in India, and to the non-commissioned officers and gallant soldiers by whom this great victory was achieved. There were Major-General Sir Joseph Thackwell, whose services in India are well known; Sir Walter Gilbert, who has been a distinguished member of our army for nearly half a century; Major-General Whish is another officer of our Indian army who has highly distinguished himself in another officer of the control of t ther quarter; Brigadiers-General Dundas, Campbell, Wheeler, Tennant, and other European and native officers, are included in this vote of thanks. On such occasions as this the names only of those in the highest rank are mentioned; but in every rank of our army, high and low, from the general to the subaltern, our army abounds with men of distinguished ability. have, on various occasions during this war, had proof of the uncommon talents, gallantry, and judgment of our youngest officers. The services of those gentlemen can never be forgotten by us, and they will some day or other shed additional lustre on the army of India. I have also to bring to your notice the services of the gallant general and the army who achieved the conquest of Mooltan. Major-General Whish and his army on that occasion displayed the power of science blended with discipline in a more than ordinary degree. The energy with which, on the junction of the Bombay division, Major-General Whish executed the attack of the fort of Mooltan was such, that it was impossible it could have escaped your notice; but a few days elapsed after the arrival of that army when the town was in our possession, and a few days later the place surrendered to us. During the siege, that brave army of Bombay, under the command of Brigadier-General Dundas, joined them, and the conduct of both armies on that occasion was particularly exemplary. I have also to bring to your notice the services rendered by a detachment of the Indian navy. That distinguished body, under Capt. Powell, rendered efficient service, and of the most important character, during the whole of the campaign. I would also bring to your notice the conduct of some of the-I will not call them wild tribes, for we have no fair reason to think that they are so, but the brave—tribes beyond the Indus, led by the gallant Edwardes, who, with incredible rapidity and the greatest valour, rendered most important services to India on that occa-These men, after their services were no longer required, were permitted to remain at Mooltan, in order to witness the tremendous and irresistible efficiency of the British army. I need not say how much these distinguished officers and men are entitled to your warmest acknowledgments and gratitude. army of India has on all occasions shone with the greatest distinction, but I do not remember any occasion on which it has exhibited greater lustre than on the present. It is peculiarly gratifying to me that among these distinguished men my old and excellent friend and comrade, Major-General Sir Walter Gilbert, has been particularly distinguished. Few men have seen more varied or desperate service. He has, in addition to the distinction he has acquired in the field, been placed at the head of a large army, for the purpose of following out the wishes of the Commander-in-Chief and the Governor-General, so as to subdue and entirely humble the presumptuous individuals who had collected the large army I have mentioned, and to drive the confederated chiefs beyond the limits of the Indus. The composition of the Indian army is the best that can possibly be imagined. It consists of some of the finest troops in her Majesty's service and our own European soldiers, which are as fine an army as any in the world; but the great beauty of our European force consists of that splendid arm-our artillery-which has shown its efficiency not only in the capture of Mooltan, but on the field of Goojerat. Never was a corps of artillery better appointed-never did a corps do its duty more zealously, successfully, and scientifically - than the artillery of Bengal. So also with regard to the native army; the sepoys possess every qualification of a good soldier; they are active, brave, and obedient, and when led by brave officers-men who understand discipline, and, while conciliating the affections of the men, know bow to enforce the performance of duty-led by such men, there is no service they are not ready to perform with honour-no amount of danger they are not ready to face; with an army of 250,000 such men-for such is the extent of the Indian army-with boundless resources, what have we to fear from any military enemy? Such is our establishment in India, and I am sure you will all unite with me this day in returning to this army, and to those individuals who have been exerting themselves in the accomplishment of this great victory, our heartfelt thanks and acknowledgments. (Cheers.) I shall not say more, but shall now propose to you resolutions embracing the votes of thanks to these individuals, which I hope will be carried unanimously. Renewed cheering.)

The Secretary then read the resolutions, as follow:-

"That the thanks of this Court be given to the Right Hon, the Earl of Dalhousie, Knight of the Most Hon. Order of the Thistle, Governor-General of India, for the zeal and ability with which the resources of the British empire in the East Indies have been applied to the support of the military operations in the Punjab.

On the first resolution being put,

Captain Shepherd, the Deputy-Chairman, said, his hon. friend had gone so fully into the question, that it would be unnecessary to detain them with any lengthened observations. He thought it right, however, to say, that his noble friend the Governor-General of India, to whom their thanks were first given, had only a very short time previously to the outrage of Mooltan arrived in India, and that that and subsequent events required a considerable amount of talent, zeal, and energy to bring to bear the resources of India upon that important crisis. noble friend had scarcely time to become acquainted with the several departments of the administration, and had exhibited throughout so much talent, zeal, discretion, energy, and firmness, that it was only equalled by the confidence he felt in the resources of the country, as he never once entertained any doubt as to the result. No doubt some parties were a little alarmed, but, as had been well said by his hon, friend, with such an army and such officers it was impossible to entertain any fears for the result. He had not the advantage of the experience of military affairs, or knowledge of military tactics, but he could appreciate the peculiar circumstances of the struggle in the Punjab, and it required no military knowledge to know that they had no mean or despicable enemy to contend with, and that the Sikhs were a brave and determined race, and, under the training of European officers, well acquainted with all the usages of modern warfare. It was also well understood that, with a perfect knowledge of the country, they were enabled to choose their position with unerring judgment and skill; and yet, with all these advantages, they were obliged to succumb before the indomitable bravery of British troops. No man had so well known how to conciliate the affection and attachment of his men as Lord Gough, and he remembered well reading the incident of the thrilling cheers with which he was received when he rode along the lines to review the troops. He thought that no panegyric he could pronounce could be more complimentary to both the leader and his men than that incident. He believed that the special thanks of the Court were also due to the gallant leader who commanded at Mooltan. True, some delay took place in its capture, but when it was recollected that 5,000 of his allies deserted him in one day and went over to the enemy, the difficulties he had to contend against might be appreciated. Ultimately, however, that im-portant fortress was taken in the most skilful and brilliant manner, and it had a most important result upon the whole campaign. Indeed, they had the highest military authority,—that of the Duke of Wellington,—that such was the fact. It relieved a large body of the army, and enabled them to join their Commander-in-Chief at the most important period at which their services were required. Whether they looked at the victory or the results that had followed, the conclusion was equally satisfactory, and he trusted it would have the ultimate result of effecting the pacification of the Punjab. It was needless for him to say that there was nothing they more earnestly desired than to see the blessings of peace and good government diffused over India; they were desirous of seeing the unexampled resources of that country developed, in order that they might contribute to the comforts and ameliorations of the condition of the people. He was aware that the gallant victory that had been achieved would produce the most important moral effect in India; and, under those circumstances, he hoped that the resolutions would not only be carried with unanimity, but with accla-

The Chairman.-I have many apologies to make for having omitted to mention one of the most distinguished corps of the army of India-I mean the engineers. I must apologise for having, while enumerating the troops, quite forgotten to refer to the valuable services of that important branch of our army, because it has distinguished itself before Mooltan, and on every other occasion on which its services have been called into requisition, in a manner which is hardly to be paralleled in the records of the Indian army. That corps has always retained the highest character for science, and for bringing into practical effect their scientific attainments, and I do not believe there is any corps in any part of the world that is superior to the engineering corps of the Indian army. Col. Cheek, who commanded that corps at the siege of Mooltan, deserves most particular mention from me; and I do think, that the way in which the operations of that siege were conducted sheds imperishable lustre on that particular and valuable branch of the service.

Mr. Lewin rose to propose an amendment, that the circum. stances connected with the battle of Chillianwallah be inquired into. ("No, no." "Order.") Had hon. proprietors forgotten the frightful amount of the loss of life which occurred on that occasion, and that Lord Gough had by his proceedings placed the whole British army in danger? (Cries of "Oh, oh.")

Capt. Shepherd observed that it was quite unprecedented to move an amendment on the occasion of a vote of thanks being proposed, and that the course which the hon. proprietor was pursuing was highly indecorous.

Mr. Lewin said, the Court was proposing a vote of thanks to Lord Gough, at the same time that they had withdrawn him from the command of their army in India. Could any one, either in the Court or out of it, really believe that the Chairman was sincere in what he had said in praise of the conduct of Lord Gough? Everybody knew that Lord Gough had pursued a course which had led to the most disastrous results, and had been guilty of the gravest misconduct. Every one, both inside and outside of that Court, had condemned his proceedings. (" No, no.")

The Chairman was happy to think that no other gentleman in that Court was capable of expressing such sentiments as they had heard from the hon, proprietor.

The resolution was then put, and carried unanimously.

On the second resolution, being a vote of thanks to Lord Gough, being put-

Mr. Lewin observed that he considered that these votes of thanks, proposed by the Court of Directors, were much more in praise of themselves than of Lord Gough. Look at the manner in which they had retained Lord Gough in command. It was quite clear they had done so merely in spite, to keep out Sir Charles Napier. ("Oh, oh.")

Mr. Twining hoped he might be allowed to express his hearty concurrence in the votes of thanks proposed. He considered they were under great obligations to the Court of Directors, not only for having brought this matter forward, but for the prompti-tude with which it had been done. They were anxious individually of expressing their feelings and collectively offering their acknowledgments to the bravery of the troops which, under God's blessing, have been enabled to achieve one of the most splendid victories on record. It was not for him to presume to enter into any detail after the very excellent, clear, and animated statement of the Chairman, but he tendered his humble acknowledgments and sincere congratulations, believing that this great achievement will be the means of restoring and confirming peace in India for many years. It was not for the sake of aggrandizement that he wished the Court to keep up a large and an efficient force in India, but it was because such a force was necessary to the preservation of that country, and which he believed would be the means of carrying out those beneficent views which were much more congenial to the feelings of the members of the Court than any aggrandizement they could achieve.

The vote was then put, and declared by the Chairman to be carried unanimously.

Mr. Lewin. - It is not correct to say that it is carried unanimously when an amendment has been proposed.

The Chairman-Yes, the vote is unanimously carried. On the third vote being put, an hon. proprietor asked whether it was not intended to insert the name of Col. Cheek in the vote of thanks.

The Chairman replied that it was only usual to mention the officers of the highest rank as the persons to whom special thanks were given by name; brigadiers general were mentioned, but not brigadiers. There were many eminent examples of young officers in the army who by their talents and gallantry had acquired fame and entitled themselves to the thanks and admiration of their country. He particularly alluded to such men as Major Edwardes, Capt. Abbott, Lieuts. Herbert, Taylor, Nicholson, Lumley, and many others, all of whom had most meritoriously distinguished themselves, but in consequence of their inferior rank, and the way in which they were employed, it was impossible for them to be distinctly mentioned in the vote.

Col. Sykes. - You have proposed a specific vote of thanks to Major General Whish for the capture of Mooltan, where that gallant officer manifested not less ability than caution in the application of his labours. I am glad that you have given your vote specifically with respect to the capture of that fortress, because it gives me an opportunity of noticing another commander, who is also entitled to our thanks, though his rank may not entitle him to the specific mention of the gratitude of the Court and of the country at large. You have mentioned the names of many young men as having eminently distinguished themselves, among whom is ranked a young subaltern of the Bengal army, who, under the most trying and most peculiar circumstances, evinced a grasp of mind, a comprehensiveness of view, a firmness of resolution, and a readiness of adaptation of the resources of the country to the peculiar wants of his own situation, which I hope justifies me in the expression of my high admiration of his conduct, and in calling the attention of the Court more particularly to the valour of that gallant officer. I mean Lieutenant Herbert Edwardes, a subaltern in the Bengal army. That young man was political assistant to the resident at Lahore—he was employed to settle the country upon the Indus in the neighbour-hood of Lahore. He had 100 horse under his command, and he was the only European present. Hearing of the attack on Lieut. Anderson and Mr. Vans Agnew, he immediately determined to go to their assistance. The next day, hearing of their having been assassinated, he resolved to revenge their assassina-On his own authority he raised troops from the Mahomedan tribes, who flocked to his standard in such numbers that he found himself in a position to advance towards Mooltan. Having levied money as he went on, and collected men throughout the country, he, on hearing that our troops had been attacked by Moolraj, made a forced march, although his guns were not able to keep up with him, and he arrived just in time to prevent the overthrow of our army. He was himself at first apparently repulsed; but in the afternoon, his guns having come up, he attacked and defeated Moolraj in the field, captured six of his guns, and subsequently advanced upon him and drove him into his fortress, and there sat down before him. He was again attacked by Moolrsj, and again successfully repulsed him, and then sat down for seven weeks before Mooltan, keeping Moolraj a prisoner during the time that our forces were coming in from the north under General Whish. I think such a man is entitled to our warmest admiration for his uncommon skill, resolution of purpose, and gallantry. I am happy at having this opportunity of expressing my admiration of such conduct, and my thorough conviction that there are in the Indian army scores more of such young men. I trust that the events that have occurred in India within the last two months will teach the British public not to despair of the courage and resolution of our forces in India. whether arising from our physical means or from our authority and moral infinence. The only thing in my mind which we have to lament in connection with these affairs is the panic which characterised the conduct of the people in this country in regard to the recent movements of our army in India,-conduct which I am almost justified in calling pusillanimity itself. I only hope that the people of a future race, who will read history, will not allow themselves to be influenced by mere passing events, but will always trust to the inevitable success of our arms, and place reliance on the bravery of our troops and the military talent of our commanders. (Cheers.)

The resolution was then unanimously agreed to.

Mr. H. Mackenzie begged to express his approbation of all that had taken place on the present occasion. It was highly important that it should be known that the feeling expressed inside of the bar was responded to by those on the outside, and that they would not withhold the meed of praise to those who merited it. It seemed to him that those who were bound by no ties to express any sentiments but such as they heartily felt, and who were under no obligation to give utterance to that expression, except as being urged by a strong sense,—that there should be more than one voice outside the bar to re-echo the praise which had been so justly bestowed by their hon. Chairman and Deputy-Chairman on the army in India,—should not allow this occasion to pass without avowing their full concurrence in the votes that were now proposed for the adoption of the Court. As one who was publicly interested in the welfare of India, having spent the longest portion of his life in that country, he could not but be impressed with the vast importance of encouraging the valour and zeal of the Indian army. He considered the native and the British army in India as united in the bonds of brotherhood, and engaged in the same glorious service. He looked to the younger men—such as Edwardes—as in fact the younger brothers of one great family. If the senior officers had done their duty, as unquestionably they had, sure he was that among their junior companions there were numbers who were endowed with the same power, the same energy, and the same moral grandeur, and who would alike expose themselves to the same dangers. He would not endeavour to criticise or praise the military operations which had lately taken place. He had not sufficient knowledge to judge, still less to condemn; but this he would say, that he did not remember any great occasion or campaign involving great dangers, in which there were not many evil predictions, and many who augured disaster, founded on the errors of great generals. He believed that men were to be found who maintained that the battle of Waterloo ought to have been lost. It was well known that, in all campaigns carried on in a new country, it was exceedingly difficult to obtain correct intelligence. The Duke of Wellington experienced this difficulty while carrying on his operations before the battle of Assaye; and in one of his letters that eminent man adverted to the criticisms which were confidently made on his proceedings by men of great talent, but also grossly ignorant of the subject of which they were treating. If they referred to that letter, they would see how carefully and anxiously he explored the country, and with what difficulty he obtained accurate informa-The men belonging to his army were strangers to the country, and those whom he employed to collect information could not venture far from his camp without the risk of being seized and destroyed. He (Mr. Mackenzie) had no doubt that the same difficulties had prevailed during the campaign in the Punjab; and if there were any blame to be attached to the recent proceedings, he believed that much which had happened was to be attributed to that very cause. It was well that this should be remembered by all,—both those who commented on the proceedings of a commander, and by those who were in command. Were this observed, it might lead them to be more cautious, especially when they considered how difficult it was to offer advice to men at the head of English armies. But there was one peculiarity belonging to the British army, which was, the confidence that what man could do, they could do; that what other troops could do, our troops could do; and that there was no danger from which they would shrink. They could easily at home lay down a plan for conducting a battle, and say how this danger could be escaped, and how that advantage could have been gained; but he confessed that he was one who would rather see a little rashness in our soldiers, than have their ardour abated by over-caution. But he believed that from the earliest time to the latest, and from the Duke of Wellington down to the lowest commander, there never was a man who performed great exploits who did not run great risks; and God forbid that in this Court, or anywhere else, we should come to examine the actions of our soldiers in that critical spirit which belongs to civil affairs. God forbid that, in rejoicing and in returning thanks for the glorious results of those actions, we should, in a carping spirit, examine the manner in which they had been achieved. He trusted he had not exceeded the limits which he had proposed to himself. He felt he had expressed himself very imperfectly, for words were wanting to him when he endeavoured to do justice to the merits of that army which their Chairman had so justly eulogised. There was nothing of which the East-India Company ought to be more proud than that it had given to its country and its Queen an army so large and so powerful, commanded by men so intellectual and so brave, to whom nothing which man could do was impossible. He would not allude to the Governor-General. He had no doubt that that nobleman deserved all the praise which had been bestowed upon him. It was highly important that, in the commencement of his career. he should be cheered forward to encounter the difficulties of his position by the approbation of that Court; and he would say, for God's sake, be not niggardly of your thanks. They knew that, in one sense, it was a cheap defence of nations. It was by such means that they could preserve to their service, perhaps, many Edwardeses who had left their home to earn fame, and whom well-bestowed praises would support in the hour of difficulty, and excite them against all possible dangers. He, therefore, most cordially concurred in the votes which had been proposed. He hoped that the Governor-General would now be able to turn his attention to the great affairs of peace. A long career of peaceful labour was still before him, and he hoped that, in the country over which he now held sway, his measures might be liberal to our friends, generous and torbearing to our enemies, and just to all. (Cheers.)

Gen. Caulfield was happy to have had an opportunity of contributing his portion of praise to the gallant army in India for the great victories they had won, and to offer his congratulations on the glorious name they had established for themselves.

The other resolutions were then unanimously agreed to, and the Court adjourned.

A Special General Court was held on the 25th of April, to take into consideration the following resolution:—

"That this Court is of opinion the treaty concluded by the Bombay Government in 1842 with Pertaub Singh, Rajah of Satrara, and subsequently renewed with his brother and successor, the late Appa Sahib, c.nferred upon, and guaranteed to, those princes the hereditary sovereignty in the principality of Sattara; and this Court being further of opinion that the heirs and successors to those princes, whether by adoption or in right of blood, are entitled to the inheritance under the terms and conditions of the said treaty, this Court considers it to be right and necessary to record its opinion that no case has been made out to justify the annexation of the said principality of Sattara to the British territory."

Mr. Sullivan said, the question they were about to discuss was one of the most important that had ever been presented to the Court; it not only vitally affected the dearest interests of every native prince and inhabitant of India, but affected the very title by which the Company itself held their own territorial possessions, so far as that title depended upon the observance of the most solemn compacts. How important the question was, would be seen by two extracts which he would read to the The first was from a minute of Lord Dalhousie, 30th August, 1848:-" I take this fitting occasion of recording my strong and deliberate opinion, that, in the exercise of a wise and sound policy, the British Government is bound not to put aside or to neglect such rightful opportunities of acquiring territory or revenue as may from time to time present themselves, whether they arise from the lapse of subordinate states, by the failure of all heirs of every description whatsoever, or from the failure of heirs natural, where the succession can be sustained only by the sanction of the Government being given to the ceremony of adoption according to the Hindoo law." The other extract was from a minute of Mr. Willoughby, dated 14th May, 1848, who stated that "a more important question than that of the continuance or extinction of the Sattara state has not arisen since I became a member of this Government; it does not affect that state exclusively, but raises the general question of what is the right policy to be pursued towards any other native state of India under similar circumstances. In other words, it raises the question whether, on failure of heirs natural, it is expedient to absorb them in the general sovereignty of the Anglo-Indian empire, or to continue them by the Hindoo custom of adoption." It was obvious, therefore, that they were not about to discuss merely the question of the expediency or justice of the Company taking possession of the Sattara state, but whether the Company had a right to seize upon and appropriate the ternitory of any native sovereign prince of India whom they might be desirous of depriving of their power. In order to a right apprehension of that question, it was absolutely necessary to keep in mind that the interests of three very distinct classes of persons were involved in it. First, the sovereign princes whose independence we had recognised, and with whom we had treated on a footing of equality, and to whom we were bound by specific treaties; secondly, those princes who were not independent sovereign princes, but to whom we were bound by specific agreements; and thirdly, the chief jagheerdars and feudatories with whom we were to deal according to the established law of India. It was most necessary to keep this distinction in mind, because in the papers before the Court they had been studiously confounded, in order to help out the argument. question was, whether the Company had a right to seize and appropriate the territory of any native sovereign prince in India who might be pronounced to have died without heirs. Upon what ground was this pretension made to rest? That we were the lords paramount of India; that we stood in the place and possessed all the rights and prerogatives of the Mogul emperors, and that upon us devolved the right to treat all the princes of India as our vassals. No one could doubt that, in point of extension of territory, and of every other attribute of real power, we stood much above the Mogul emperors; but non constat that we were entitled to exercise the rights of the Mogul emperors. Those who put forth that monstrous proposition forgot that the Mogul emperors were despots in the most extreme form-that their will was their law; and that ours was not a despotic government; as between us and our subjects in India our authority was limited and defined by a code of regulations we had passed for their benefit. We had, by specific treaties, voluntarily denuded ourselves of every arbitrary power which night otherwise have belonged to us. It was by those treaties that we were to be guided, and not by any vestige of arbitrary power which we might have derived from our Mogul predecessors. The Rajah of Sattara was one of those sovereign princes with whom we had treated on a footing of equality. And the question to be discussed was what were the obligations we contracted under our treaty with that prince? How was this important question dealt with in the papers before the Court, particularly in that pithy despatch of the Court of Directors of the 24th Jan., 1849? Were the Directors anxious to observe the obligations embraced by that treaty? Had they called to their aid the gentleman by whom that treaty was made to inter-pret those obligations? The Court should judge for themselves by the extract he would now read from that despatch :- "We have read these various papers with the greatest attention, and have weighed all the considerations set forth in them with a deep sense of responsibility. The result of our deliberation is that, concurring with you in opinion, we are fully satisfied that by the general law and custom of India, a dependent principality like that of Sattara cannot pass to an adopted heir without the consent of the paramount power; that we are under no pledge, direct or constructive, to give such consent, and that the general interests committed to our charge are best consulted by withholding it." In that extract they heard of the general law and custom of India, but of the obligations contracted under the treaty they heard no more than if the East-India Company were as little concerned in it as the Emperor of Russia. despatch he had referred to, it was assumed that Lord Hastings and Mr. Elphinstone intended to place the Rajah of Sattara upon a footing totally different from that of any other native prince with whom the Company were in alliance. Was it not marvellous that, while the Court of Directors were endeavouring to discover what was the exact status which it was the intention of Lord Hastings and Mr. Elphinstone the Rajah of Sattara should hold, they should have overlooked the proclamation issued by Mr. Elphinstone on the 11th Feb., 1818, to the Mahratta nation, in which he stated that the Rajah of Sattara had been placed at the head of the Sattara state as an independent sovereign; and also the letter addressed to him by the Governor-General on the 8th June, 1818, in which it was stated that the government of Sattara ought to be placed on an independent footing, like the governments of other native provinces? Twenty years afterwards, in Sept., 1839, Sir James Carnac stated that the Rajah of Sattara was not only a sovereign prince quoad his own people, but that he was a sovereign prince quoad the British Government, and that the British Government had no right to assume any superiority over him. Could it, in the face of this express and unqualified language on the part of Mr. Elphinstone and Lord Hastings, be contended that their intention was not to make the Rajah of Sattara a sovereign equal to the other princes of India, but to make him a sort of privileged puppet?

But it was said that the restrictions imposed upon the Raiah proved that he was a dependent prince. He (Mr. Sullivan) contended that it was quite competent for the British Government to impose those restrictions upon him without degrading him in his character of an independent sovereign. But even if it were proved to be the intention of Lord Hastings and Mr. Elphinstone to make the Rajah of Sattara a limited and dependent sovereign, would that avoid the treaty which the Company had made with him? No. The territory was ceded to the Rajah without any reference to his status. Dependent or independent, that treaty was binding upon us. What was the meaning of that treaty? The late Sir John Malcolm, who was What was the more concerned with the Company's relations with the native princes in India than any other person, had laid it down that we were bound by every obligation of good faith to interpret our treaties with those princes in that sense in which they them-selves were induced or permitted to understand them. Such, also, was the language of Sir George Clerk. The question then was, in what sense was this treaty interpreted by us to the Rajah of Sattara? The British resident, at the time the treaty was about to be entered into, waited upon the Rajah three successive days for the express purpose of explaining to him in his own language the terms of the treaty. Those terms Sir George Clerk said "were remarkably comprehensive, explicit, and decisive, and admitted but of one meaning, namely, that the British Government pledged itself to promote to the sovereignty of Sattara the Rajah Pertaub Singh. It was a treaty of perpetual triendship and alliance between the Company and his Highness, his heizs and successors." No one had had the boldness to impugn this construction of the treaty. It was true, Mr. Reid and Mr. Willoughby were to be found quibbling about its interpretation, and had endeavoured to put another construction upon it. But those gentlemen used only the English version, not the Mahratta or Persian, which was delivered to the Rajah. In support of his right to adopt the English version, Mr. Willoughby quoted as a precedent the discussion which occurred in 1846 on the correct interpretation of an article in the treaty with the Baroda state, the Bombay Government interpreting it according to the English, and his Highness the Guicowar, according to the Mahratta version. The question was referred to the Governor-General of India, who concurred with the Bombay Government. Thus it appeared that the English Government might depute an agent to explain a treaty with a native prince, drawn up in his own language, and then, when it suited their purpose to throw that treaty to the winds, say that it imposed no obligation upon them, but that the English treaty was that by which they alone were bound. Great stress had been laid upon the admission made by the Rajah, that no adoption could be valid unless it were acquiesced in by the British Government. Grant that such an admission was made; under what circumstances was it made? Why, when he was on the point of death; with the knowledge that his elder brother had adopted a son, and when he was in a state of overwhelming anxiety to secure the succession to his own adopted son. No weight could be attached to such an admission. But whatever admission the late Rajah might have made, it could not stand against the interest of those who came after him, or vitiate their rights. Having ceded a territory to an Hindoo prince, his heirs, and successors, in perpetual sove-reignty, and it being according to the Hindoo religion the positive duty of that prince to appoint an heir in the event of his not having children, nothing could ber that right of adoption but a positive stipulation to that effect. The sense in which the late Rajah, before he came into possession of the Raj, understood the treaty was, that if his brother Pertaub Singh had done anything wrong he should succeed him, not as his lineal descendant, but as his next collateral heir; and as such he was established by Sir Robert Grant, who said that though Pertaub Singh was himself guilty, yet that did not affect the succession. Great stress had been laid upon a declaration made by Sir James Carnac as to the right of adoption; but he did not make the treaty of 1819, he only renewed it in 1839, without explanation or modification in any essential particular. Therefore the treaty of 1839 had precisely the same meaning as that of 1819. And to know what that meaning was, they should ask those who made the treaty-Mr. Elphinstone and Capt. Grant. But they did not dare ask Mr. Elphinstone what his intention was: if they had he would have referred them to his recorded reasons at the time of making the treaty, and would have told them that the treaty meant precisely the same as every other treaty which the British Government had entered into with the native princes. Upon what tenure did they hold all their provinces in India but by solemn treaties entered into with the native powers? And upon what tenure did many of the native princes, to whom the British Government had ceded territories in perpetual sovereignty, hold their possessions, but upon the faith of solemn treaties? The words in the Sattara treaty were precisely the same as those used in all other treaties; so that if the same construction were to be put upon those other treaties as they were now putting upon the treaty with the Rajah of Sattara, the time might arrive when the East-India Company might cease to have existence, and then the native princes might claim the right to resume possession of those territories which they had ceded by treaties to that Company. It was true we had another title, that of the sword, and so had the Mogul emperors; but what was their state now? He would say, "Take warning from the destruction of that great power, and do not persevere in the breach of these treaties." It was said that collateral heirs had no right to succeed; but the treaty did not say so; and then it was declared that henceforth none but lineal heirs should sucreed to any principality. Did they think that the chiefs would ever want natural heirs? They would spring up like mushrooms. The question before the Court was one respecting the meaning of treaties, and was to be decided by international law. would they find a precedent for what they had done in the proceedings of any civilized nation in the world? Was it the way in which they settled their treatics with the United States of America? Passing from the question of right to that of policy, he would refer the Court to their own records, where they would find that it was the opinion of every man competent to give an opinion on the subject, that constantly to aim at an extension of territory in India was the greatest political blunder they could commit. (The hon. proprietor here quoted the opinions of Sir John Malcolm, Mr. Elphinstone, and Sir Thomas Munro in support of that proposition; and the picture drawn by Mr. Frere, the resident at Sattara, of the distress and misery which had been brought on the people of Sattara by the system which had been adopted in that state, in the displacement of all the natives from public employments and the substitution of Europeans; a course of mischievous policy which had pursued in all our territorial acquisitions in India.) been while those whom he might call their political giants were thus warning them of the consequences of their conduct, and denouncing their policy as a blunder, if not a crime; what said those whom he might call the pigmies? What said Lord Dalhousie, the governor-general, who was scarcely warm in his "He could not conceive it possible for any one to dispute the policy of taking possession of states which might lie in the midst of our own territories, thereby consolidating those we already possessed, and thus getting rid of those petty intervening principalities, which might be made a means of annoyance, but which could never be a source of strength." The Court of Proprietors could not fail to be struck with the confidence, he might say the presumption, of this language on the part of the Governor-General, whose attention had since his arrival in India been limited to one subject, namely, the war in the Punjab. But did they believe that such language could be broached with impunity? That when the native princes heard their fate thus sealed, they would not entertain feelings of the greatest hostility against the British Government? But, after all, were they sure they could get possession of the Sattara territory? Had they forgotten the number of insurrections that broke out before they got possession of the Mahratta country, and how much it would cost them to put them down? But though they had extinguished the existence of a rajah of Sattara, they had not annihilated the Sattara people, who would be ready to take part with their princes against the English power when-ever a favourable opportunity should offer, and it might cost ten years of the Sattara revenue to put down one insur-rection. It could not be pretended that the confiscation of the territory of Sattara was for the good of the people. It was, he knew, the fashion to disparage a native administration, and to assume the vast superiority of a British over a native govern-ment; but many who had lived the greater part of their lives in those native states had come to a conclusion diametrically opposite to such an opinion. But, after all, what did it matter what those eminent men might think of the subject? The question was, what did the people think of it? and the people had answered that question in the most emphatic and indisputable manner, for they had told the British powers that they preferred living under their own princes and governments. then, were to be benefited by this proceeding? The Government of Bombay would obtain the means of making a legal provision for a few of their servants, and would get a few more lacs into their treasury; but the whole country would be involved in misery and distress; and the Company would lose its character, and by losing its character would lose its strength. He would ask, in conclusion, how could they, who possessed not the power to touch the hair of the head of one of their meanest subjects but by a regular and legal process, thus strip princes of their dominions and chiefs of their principalities upon their mere sic volo, sic jubeo? If this were the condition of the native princes, how must they pray for the subversion of that government by which they were thus oppressed! Heavy, indeed, must be the responsibility of those who advised and adopted this measure. By this wanton extension of their aggressions on the native states they were undermining their own power, and taking a wide stride towards the subversion of that mighty empire which had been entrusted to their charge. (Cheers.) The hon. proprietor concluded by moving the resolution.

Major-General Briggs, in seconding the motion, disclaimed

Major-General Briggs, in seconding the motion, disclaimed having, in his letter of the 1st January, 1827, when he was the British resident at the court of Sattara, predicted that the then Rajah of Sattara was going to be engaged in hostilities with the British Government, as it was alleged he had done, by Mr.

Willoughby, in his minute of the 14th of May, 1818.

The Chairman. - After the eloquent speech they had just heard, it now became his duty to address the Court, and he would do so as briefly as possible. They had heard a great deal from the hon, mover concerning the general question, in reference to our position in India; but he thought it would be better for him and for this Court to adhere as closely as possible to the question actually before them. The hon gentleman had laid great stress on the question of right, and that was the question, and more especially as it affected the family of the late Rajah of Sattara; because if the right of that family should not prove to have been sustained, they would have no claim upon the notice of that Court, inasmuch as, with regard to the general question of policy, they had nothing whatever to do with it. The antiquity of the family of the Rajah had been adverted to; but the truth was, that Sevajee, who was the founder of the family, was not born until near the middle of the seventeenth cen-This individual, of whom they had heard so much, was the son of an officer in the service of the state of Beejapoor, who, for certain military services, was granted a jagheer, which he maintained by force or fraud; this was the origin of the celebrated family of Sattara. How did this family prosper? Why it lasted but three generations. It had been maintained during one hundred years by the expedient of adoption. That was all it was necessary for him to say with respect to the antiquity of that family. They had been told that this was a question of right, and that the East-India Company had granted an independent sovereignty to Pertaub Singh, his heirs and successors, in perpetuity. Now he denied entirely that an independent sovereignty was granted. The word "independent" was not to be found in the treaty. The articles of the treaty were so plainly opposed to the idea of independence, that he had never read a treaty with any power in India that contained so many restrictions as that entered into by Mr. Elphinstone, in the year 1819, with Pertaub Singh. idea of an independent sovereignty was, that the person holding it was responsible to no individual, to no power, but that he possessed absolute power himself. But what were the terms of the treaty? They were, that the Rajah should get a territory "sufficient for the maintenance of his family in comfort and dignity;" that he was "to hold that territory in subordinate co-operation with the British Government," and he was "to be guided in all matters by the advice of the British agent at his court." Who had ever heard of an independent sovereign being subject to the guidance of another power?

Mr. Sullivan.—The treaty with the Rajah of Mysore was in precisely the same terms.

The Chairman.-It was a portion of the terms and conditions, and not a more expression in the preamble of the treaty, that was important. The tenure of the Rujah depended on the terms of the treaty, and what were they? He was to be guided in all matters by the British Government, and he bound himself not to write or speak to, or have any intercourse whatsoever with, his neighbours, without the consent and sanction of the British Government; and even in matters concerning the forming matrimonial connections for his family, he was to hold no correspondence except through the representative of the British Government. After this, was it possible to say that such a person was an independent sovereign? But not only was it not in the terms of the treaty an independent sovereignty, but he denied that any person in India had the power to grant such an independent sovereignty to any individual whatever. If any of their servants in India were to make such a grant, it would be illegal, because it would be tantamount to a dismembering of the Indian empire. But the rights granted by the treaty were so extremely stringent, that it was impossible to listen to the argument advanced on the opposite side. But it was important to show what the understanding of Mr. Elphinstone was when that treaty was granted. It had been considered by Hon.
Proprietors as a matter of importance that reference should be made to Mr. Elphinstone to ascertain what his views were; but as thirty years had elapsed since then, he (the Chairman) thought it would be more satisfactory to the Court to know what his views were at that time, as expressed by himself. Mr. Elphinstone stated that it was not only advisable to gain the Rajah's goodwill, but that it was required for our security to provide for the establishment of the supremacy of the British Government: and unless the means adopted were stringent, the machine we were setting up would be liable to be turned against us, and the release of the Rajah of Sattara would prolong the distractions and insults which we had experienced from the treacheries of the This was what Mr. Elphinstone intended to be done, Peishwa. and those were the instructions communicated to Capt. Grant. The supremacy of the British Government is the sine qua non. Now, in what way did the Rajah himself understand the terms upon which he obtained the territories of Sattara? Capt. Grant stated that the Rajah was desirous of having it expressly mentioned in the treaty that the British political agent should at no time interfere with regulating the interior of his family. So certain and so clearly did the Rajah understand that he was to be guided in all matters by, and to be under the entire control of, the British Government, that he was afraid lest the agent of the British Government should interfere even in the internal management of his family. So certain was he of the subordinate position in which he stood, that he was anxious to provide against any such interference by a stipulation in the treaty. How did this stand with the idea of an independent sovereign? Capt. Grant in his report went on to say, that this led to a long conversation, in which Dajeeba asked him what was the use of being a Rajalı if he could not act according to his inclination? That was a very sensible remark; but the Rajah, turning round, replied, laughing, "You are a great blockhead; don't you see I may do what I like, provided I do what is right?" What sort of notion was this of an independent sovereign? What the first Rajah of Sattara, under the treaty of 1819, thought of the absolute dependency in which that treaty placed him, was evidenced also by his refusal, in 1839, to bind himself, in good faith, to act up literally to all the articles of it. Sir James Carnac said that that was the reason why the Rajah had refused three different times to sign the original treaty from which the one of 1839 was taken, remarking that assenting to it would reduce him to the condition of a mamulutdar; meaning a manager or farmer of very extraordinary that the idea of an independent sovereignty should be maintained in that Court. With respect to the question of right of succession, the grant was, that the territory should go to the Rajah, his heirs and successors. The terms used in the Mahratta and Persian versions of the treaty were "Furzand o warisan, o kaim makaman." The hon, gentleman refused to admit that the English words were a correct translation; but when a treaty was made, the grantor of that treaty must necessarily in the first instance draw out the original; and, as the British Government were the grantors, the treaty would be in the English language, and the Mahratta would therefore be the translation. But he maintained that the words in the Mahratta version were stronger, if anything, than the English, in favour of the view he took upon the subject. A version had been given of these words by Rungo Bapojee, giving to them the meaning of the words from generation to generation;" but it so happened that there was no generation in this family, for neither of the late Rajahs had any heirs by generation. The word "warisan" was taken from the Mahomedan law; and it meant not merely heirs of the body, but it meant all who were entitled to share the property of the deceased. It comprehended not only women and children, but master of a slave: where a slave died, leaving property, the master was entitled to inherit it. He attached very conthe master was entitled to finish it. It attacted very considerable weight to this part of the argument. In English, the meaning of the word "heir" denoted the person who was entitled to succeed by the act of God; but what was adoption? The person adopted was not heir by the act of God, but by the act of man, and he could not succeed without the permission of the paramount power. Then with respect to the meaning of the word "successors." It was said that "kaim meaning of the word successors. It was said that "adm makaman" meant 'representative'—it meant a person standing in the place of another. It actually signified what was read in the Book of Kings, in the case of the succession of Solomon to his father David, where it was stated that "David died and was gathered to his fathers, and Solomon, his son, reigned in his With regard to the power of the East-India Company, by the law officers of the Company,—there having been several instances in which escheats had been referred to the Government in this country, by whom it had been decided that, the British Government being the supreme power, the property of the par-ties dying without heirs had escheated to them. One was the case of an unfortunate rajah who committed suicide, and another was that of a man who had no legitimate children. In both cases the property was, by the liberality of the Government, restored to the family. But the question having been settled, it was beyond the power of that Court to alter the law. He contended that, in a matter of adoption, the ruling power had the right by law, as well as by custom, to interfere. Nothing in his opinion could be a stronger evidence of this than the words uttered by the late Rajah of Sattara, when, on hearing that the ex-Rajah had adopted a son, he said that it was entirely out of his power to do so unless he had first obtained the consent of the British Government. Colonel Robertson had stated it to be "an established principle that no adoption gave a right of succession to any public office or jagheer without the confirmation of the sovereign." It was said there was a difference between a jagheer and a principality. He thought the Hindoo law would contemplate both the one and the other, under similar circumstances. Still, whatever was the case, the law was settled and undisputed, that on all occasions it was necessary to obtain the sanction of the ruling power before the adoption was considered valid. The Punt Souchoos' case shows this; and we have also the dicta of the late Rajah to the effect that, in the absence of lineal heirs, neither succession by adoption to the raj, nor by collateral blood, is legal without the confirmation of the paramount power. In the present case there are no collaterals by descent from the first grantee of 1819, nor from the second grantee of 1839; so that now the house of Sattara is again extinct. They must then go back to the terms of the treaty, and by them the Rajah of Sattara bound himself to be guided in all matters by the will of the British Government. Now it did appear to him to be monstrous to maintain that a man who so bound himself should be considered to have an absolute power of disposing of the territory he obtained under the treaty, in spite of the Government to whom he became so bound. He conceived that, unless the late Rajah had actually obtained the permission of the British Government to adopt, he was bound to withhold himself from doing so; and that, if he did make an adoption, it could only be considered valid so far as the religious observance was concerned, but by no means as giving any title with respect to this sovereignty. It had been said that, if the Company broke the terms of the treaty, they would endanger the public peace, which mainly depended upon the good opinion which existed towards them in India. Now he maintained that they had not broken the treaty, but had strictly adhered to it; and that, if they looked back to the whole of the case, they would find, from first to last, that, in the discharge of their duty, they had not done anything which was likely to offend the feelings of the people of India, but that they should enlist those feelings in their favour. How had they acted towards the late Rajah, who, after the treachery of his brother, was appointed to the Raj, not as his brother's successor, but as his substitute? Appa Sahib considered it to be an act of the greatest possible generosity on the part of the British Government to transfer the Raj to him; but it had not been given to him as an act of succession, but entirely at the free will and pleasure of the Government. With respect to the expediency of granting to this family for a third time a territory comprehending a revenue of about £150,000 a year, he thought that was a question which was certainly open to doubt. It was impossible for those who had the whole weight of the Government of India upon their shoulders to give to one individual, who was unknown, and whose family never possessed a farthing, and who was only known as belonging to a family to an individual of which the Company had granted everything,—who afterwards became the most ungrateful of individuals that ever existed,such an income, without very strong grounds indeed. respect to the feelings of the people of India, he was perfectly confident that whatever the decision of the Court of Directors might be, there was not half-a-dozen states in India who cared one farthing about Sattara. It was a matter for the consideration of the Government of India, and they had given their best attention to it. There was this point that should not be lost sight of,—that whatever might be given to one individual must necessarily to the same amount be taken from the people of India, who were now already rather over than under assessed. He admitted that, if it were the case of a family that was known to be popular in India, the question would require consideration; but this was not such a family, and it would not consist with good policy to grant to an individual of a family like this so large a proportion of the revenues of India. He hoped he had shown that, in point of right, this family of Sattara had now ceased, and that they could not, either by the law or custom of India, claim possession of that territory by means of adoption; and, there being no heirs by adoption, the collaterals could not succeed, there being hardly an instance in which collaterals had by right succeeded to any principality. In the case of Holkar, a collateral succeeded, he having been adopted, but without the permission of the paramount power. That individual was ousted by his competitors, thus showing that the natives of India did attach the greatest possible weight to the act of confirmation, or otherwise, of the British Government. With regard to these two boys, whose claims were advocated by hon. gentlemen, they could not possibly be admitted, according to the law and practice of India, to succeed to the territory of Sattara, because the Company, as lord paramount, had refused to recognise their adoption, while again they could not claim as collaterals, because, having been adopted, though not with the permission of the Company, they were by the Hindoo law wholly estranged in blood from their natural parents, through whom alone they could claim as collaterals. There were no other collaterals who There were no other collaterals who could claim, because both the late Rajah and the ex-Rajah died without children, and on referring to the pedigree, he found the family of Tanjore to be excluded, as some other of the collateral branches, by being of half-blood. Where then would they go for the collateral descent? Were they to advertise throughout India? With regard to the question of expediency, he admitted that the Court of Proprietors had the power, and probably it was very desirable that they should maintain the power, of questioning any decision that had been passed by the Court of Directors. They might express their dissent from that decision, but the decision having been adopted, it was impossible for this Court to interfere so as to reverse it. Nothing now remained to him but to meet the motion with a direct negative, which he should certainly do.

Sir J. L. Lushington observed that by the act of 33rd Geo. 3rd, no General Court of Proprietors could rescind, qualify, revoke, or vary any order of the Court of Directors touching and concerning the civil and military affairs of India, after the same had received the approbation of the Board of Control. Now, in this case the Board of Control had confirmed the decision of the Court of Directors, so that, in fact, the General Court of Proprietors had nothing further to do with the subject. He hoped the Court would no longer persist in agitating this question.

Major Moore suggested that the legality of the proceedings should be submitted to the judges in India, or to the judges in this country. If the confiscation should be declared legal, then the question of expediency might afterwards be considered.

Mr. Serjeant Bain observed that, though it might be true that the Court of Proprietors might not have a power to overturn the order of the Court of Directors, after being confirmed by the Board of Control, yet he flattered himself that if the Court of Proprietors should recommend a reconsideration of the steps the Directors had taken it might have some effect on their minds. This decision affected the interests of many thousands in Sattara. He contended that the words in the treaty "heirs and successors" ought to be construed according to the way in which they were understood in our vulgar tongue, and it was evident that the word "successors" imported something different altogether from the word "heirs;" and he had no doubt that the framer of the treaty did contemplate that the future reigning sovereign of Sattara would do that which the law of his country gave him the power to do, viz. adopt a son who, not being the heir of his body, would come under the word "successor." He had been a great deal surprised that it should have been contended that the Rajah was a dependent sovereign because he had given up a part of his independence. According to the oldest authorities it was perfectly competent for a sovereign to give up a part of his rights, and yet retain the character of an independent sovereign. Much had been said as to the sense in which the Rajah himself understood the treaty. Now, the best interpretation of his manner of understanding it was his own acts; and what was it he did? Finding himself unwell, he sent for Mr. Frere, and he then spoke of his having adopted a son in the usual manner. What was done was done perfectly bona fide, and showed that he was acting according to what he understood to be the meaning of the treaty, and according to the law of his own country. When the form of adoption was completed, the event was announced to his people. The compact entered into with the Rajah was not a compact with him as an individual, but as the head and representative of the state; and after the act of adoption had been announced and confirmed to the people it should not be set aside without the most stringent reasons.

Mr. Weeding expressed his approbation of the course which had been adopted by the Court of Directors, and trusted that the motion of the hon. gentleman would be rejected by a large majority.

The Chairman said that, in consequence of the lateness of the hour, and having to attend to the despatch of the Indian Mail, by which the votes of thanks which had been passed by Parliament and that Court to the Governor-General and the Indian Army were about to be despatched, he must propose that the debate be adjourned until Friday.

The Court accordingly adjourned.

APRIL 27.

The Court met by adjournment to resume the debate. Mr. Holt Mackenzie said he entertained a strong feeling that injustice had been done to the Rajah of Sattara. He believed it was their wish that justice should be done; for if it was true anywhere else, it was particularly true in India, that in the long run expediency depended upon justice. He hoped that if, in the course of their discussions, there should appear reason to alter their decision, it was not too late to do so. He was not sanguine enough to expect that such a result would be immediately arrived at. Lord Dalhousie had been but recently called upon to decide this case. He considered that call was at too early a period of his government, when the very safety of the empire might in some degree be put in jeopardy should that decision be erroneous. Without the aid of counsel, without a hearing of the parties, without the advantage of public discussion, he did not think that Lord Dalhousie had had fair play for his admirable judgment. He thought that, if his lordship could have conveyed to him the remarks which had been made by Mr. Sullivan, the noble lord would not only perceive that there was a shadow of doubt, but that there were doubts of the gravest kind, as to the soundness of his decision, and that there were the most solid grounds for believing that he had decided wrongly. right of the Rajah, in his apprehension, was such as would have been established in any court of justice. Although it was true the Court of Proprietors had no direct power, yet, if it were only true to itself, he believed it had very considerable authority, and he believed their discussion of this question would be by no means unimportant in its results. It was a great consolation to the suffering to be able to complain, and a great security against tyranny of any kind to be able to petition, and, from long experience, he knew that there was no right more valuable among the natives of India than the right of petitioning that Court; and it was of great importance that they should know that no man could be injured without being heard. The case now before them was not the Sattara case; it was entirely a new case. It should be distinctly understood that it was the decision of the Court of Directors with which they then had to do. tion was, whether the Court of Directors were justified in saying that, by the general law and custom of India, an independent principality could not pass to an adopted heir without the consent of the paramount authority. Now he could not find a tittle of evidence to support that decision. He took it for granted that they must, first of all, turn to the treaty, which, though made with Pertaub Singh, was in fact a treaty with the state. It had been said that the word "heirs" was limited to the heirs of the body, but the highest authorities whom he had consulted had declared that, in the case of a Hindoo, it was absolutely impossible and absurd, and that an adopted son was as much an heir as an heir of the body. He admitted that the Rajah was subordinate in one sense; but the real point at issue was his inheritance-whether, as far as that went, he was independent. He (Mr. Mackenzie) thought he was. As to any other kind of independence, he neither claimed it nor had any wish to claim it. He had looked in vain for words to justify the notion, that they had the power to control the inheritance. If, then, he was entitled to inheritance without their leave, he was also entitled to adopt without their leave. He could mention a thousand cases in which estates had been conveyed by adoption, and where no notice to the lord paramount was required. In those cases no court of law would think of allowing the title of the adopted son to be doubted—on that ground; so that it was highly important to recollect that, when they spoke of the sanction of the Government being required, they meant the administrative sanction, with a view to preserving the peace and tranquillity of the country, by avoiding disputes. As to the policy of these proceedings, it was the opinion of Sir John Malcolm that it was almost hopeless to expect that the great jageerdars would join the British Government unless that Government had the Rajah of Sattara on their side. They might take his territory and deny his title; but his family would still remain. The people throughout India were habitually tenacious of their rightful possessions. They might deprive him of his right, but his influence would long survive his actual possession of power. (Cheers.)

Sir Henry Willock said, he was not a member of the Directors during the last official year, and, under ordinary circumstances, he should at all times support a decision passed by the majority of the Court; but the question they were called upon to consider, both in its immediate effects, and as forming the basis of judgment on other Hindoo principalities which may hereafter be situated similarly with Sattara, was so momentous, that he should not be acting a manly or conscientious part in shirking the expression of his opinion. He had always been under the conviction that the deposition of Pertaub Singh, Rajah of Sattara, was forced upon the Government of India and upon the home authorities by his misconduct, and had never had occasion to swerve from that opinion. But a new case had arisen, entirely disconnected with the deposition. In raising Appa Sahib to the musnud, the British Government virtually declared that even the misconduct of the reigning prince was not to involve the annihilation of the Raj, and the duty of the Court of Directors, on the death of Appa Sahib, according to his notions, was restricted to the choice of a successor. He conceived that the East-India Company were bound to fulfil this expectation of the family, and that, in annexing the territory of Sattara, a sacred engagement had been violated, which must have the worst moral effect on the minds of the Indian public, and on the minds of all the princes of India, who still retain a nominal independence under their supremacy. If words have meaning, the Raj of Sattara was most solemnly ceded in perpetuity, both in letter and spirit, and he deeply regretted that the national honour had been compromised by the decision of the Court and of the Government. He was the more particular in recording his opinion on the recent instance of annexation, because he feared that it might lead to the extermination of the few remaining Indian principalities.

Sir R. Campbell also considered the course which had been adopted to be a gross violation of the treaty entered into with the late Rajah, and should vote for rescinding the order for the confiscation of the Sattara state.

Mr. H. T. Prinsep contended that the sanction of the Company was necessary to the act of adoption, as an actual recognition of the person to be adopted. Of this the Rajah was perfectly sensible, as was proved by his consulting Mr. Frere on the subject, who gave his opinion that the Rajah had no authority to adopt, and that if he did adopt such a person as he had pointed out, the party would be sure to be rejected. It was admitted by Mr. Frere, that but for the accidental presence of the boy he never would have been adopted. Such an adoption was quite beneath the dignity of the Court to sanction. But supposing the adoption to be set aside, then came the question, was the Company to claim the territories as an escheat? That was a very different question. Either they were to regard it as an escheat, or they must establish some person as the Rajah of Sattara, who among the many hundreds could trace their genealogy up to Sevajee, because the treaty bound them to give the territory in perpetual sovereignty to the Rajah of Sattara, his heirs and successors for ever. If the territory had not been granted by the Company, he should have had great difficulty in saying they had any right to resume it; but being bound to maintain the public tranquillity, and to conduct the administration, in consequence of no one coming forward to claim the succession, he felt himself bound to support the course which had been adopted by the Court of Directors; but he did so in a qualified manner, so as to allow of the distinction which he had pointed

Col. Sykes said, as he was not in office last year, his sentiments on this subject had not been placed on record. He owed it to his constituents and to himself that there should be no mistake on that subject. The primary question was the treaty, and nothing but the treaty. According to the words of that treaty, the Company bound themselves to grant to the family of Sattara, in perpetuity, the territory of that state, and the words were "heirs and successors," which contemplated that there should always be somebody to hold that territory. If any doubt existed as to what the meaning of the treaty was, why did they not ask those who made it? Did the treaty or not contemplate that the Raj should not lapse provided there were heirs? Then might come the question, who were the heirs, and were they likely to be found? If they would admit the principle of succession, they would get rid of the question of adoption altoge-ther. In that case the state would go to the next of blood, and in God's name let it be given to him. Justice demanded it, the reputation of the British name demanded it, and he would say that policy equally demanded it.

Mr. Morris supported the motion.

Mr. Chas. Mills said, it had been stated that this was not the Sattara question, nor the settlement of the Sattara question. All he could say was, if the Court of Directors could effect the object, they would be entitled to the thanks of the public at large. Mr. Mackenzie had, no doubt inadvertently, said that Lord Dalhousie had decided this question without proper information or due consideration of the subject.

Mr. Mackenzie explained that what he meant to say was, that Lord Dalhousie wanted those advantages which he would have had if he had had greater leisure and more experience; but he did not mean to cast an imputation upon him of having decided without firmly believing that he was right, and that he had taken full means for acquiring the necessary information.

Mr. Mills admitted that the Court of Directors were compelled to come to a decision. They aid not come we that decision without much anxious deliberation, and without the discussion of those differences of opinion which must always attend a very difficult subject. The fact, however, was, that the decision was arrived at by a very large majority of the Court, there being no less than 16 to 6; those who differed from the majority had, with one exception, absolved themselves from the responsibility of that measure by very able dissents upon the subject. All those able papers were placed before the executive co-ordinate authority, and, after seeing them, they gave their assent to the measure. It had by this time been promulgated in India, and he ventured to say, if it should ever be questioned, it would receive the support of her Majesty's Government and of both Houses of Parliament. The resolution before the Court was so vague that he should not have understood the nature of it, whether it was intended to finish here, or to take ulterior proceedings, if Mr. Mackenzie had not spo-ken of a reversal of this decision.

Mr. Mackenzie said he was not a party to the resolution.

Mr. Mills was glad of that, because, whoever were the parties. they had given no reasons for their opinion. He considered it to be a vote of want of confidence in the judgment of their executive, and if so, his earnest wish was that it should be passed by the proprietors at large. He should, therefore, affix his signature to a requisition that the question be decided by ballot

Major Oliphant did not agree with his hon. colleague, that, if the resolution were carried, it would be a vote of censure upon the executive. It was inconceivable that any large body of men should always be right.

Mr. Mills had expressly stated that it was not a vote of censure, but a vote of want of confidence.

Major Oliphant could not conceive the utility of the law giving the proprietors the power to meet, if they were not at liberty to express the opinions they conscientiously held. Every gentleman acquainted with India who had spoken on this question, had spoken in a way which made him conscientiously believe that the East India Company had no right to this territory.

The Deputy-Chairman (Mr. Shepherd) also declared that he did not regard the resolution as a vote of want of confidence in the Court of Directors. Mr. Sullivan replied.

The Chairman announced that a paper had been placed in his hands, signed by the requisite number of proprietors, demanding a ballot; he therefore appointed the 1st of May for that

The Court then adjourned.

Ferris, commanding Rampore forces, Robilcund, India, Jan. 15, 1849.—'To Professor Holloway. Sir,—I deem that your wonderful medicines ought to be well known, and I take the liberty of reporting a miraculous cure under my own eye. An old woman had teen for the last two years quite bedridden, having entirely lost the use of her legs from the hip joint. Her limbs were apparently quite dead, and without the slightest feeling, but by the use of your Ointment and Pills she is quite restored. (Signed) E. F. F. F. F. F. S. Sold by all venders of medicines, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native venders of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

BEAUTIFUL TEETH.—ROWLANDS' ODONTO, BEAUTIFUL TEETH.—ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE,—a white powder, compounded of the choicest and most recherche ingredients of the Oriental herbal, of inestimable value in preserving and beautifying the teeth, strengthening the gums, and in giving sweetness and perfume to the breath. It extirpates all tartarous adhesions to the teeth, and insures a pearl-like whiteness to the enamelled surface. Its anti-septic and anti-scorbutic properties exercise a highly beneficial and salutary influence; they arrest the further progress of decay of the teeth, induce a healthy action of the gums, and cause them to assume the brightness and colour indicative of perfect soundness; while, by confirming their adhesion to the teeth, they give unlimited enjoyment and fresh zest to appetite, by perpetuating effective and complete mastication. The Proprietors of this Dentifrice pledge themselves that its efficacy in preserving and embellishing the teeth far surpasses anything of the kind every yet offered to the public, and has, in consequence, obtained its selection by her Majesty the Queen, the Court and Royal Family of Great Britain, and the Sovereigns and Nobility throughout Europe.—Price 2s. 9d. per box. CAUTION.—To protect the public from fraud, the Hon. Commissioners have directed the Proprietors' name and address, thus,—"A. Row-Land and Son, 20, Hatton Garden," to be engraved on the Government stamp, which is affixed on each box.

ROWLANDS' ALSANA EXTRACT, for relieving the tooth-ache, gumboils, and swelled face, and which, by constantly using, prevents those maladies. In the anguish of exeruciating paln, it affords instantaneous relief. It is perfectly innocent in its nature.—2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 10s. 6d. per bottle. The Government Stamp, as on the "Odonto," is affixed on each bottle. Solid by the Proprietors, and by Chemists & Perfumers.—Beware of spurious imitations:

OR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH, Price 2s. 6d.-Patronized by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and H.R.H. the Duchess of Kent.—Mr. THOMAS HOWARD'S SUCCEDANEUM, the Duchess of Kent.—Air. THOMAS HOWARD'S SUCCEDANEUM, for stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a solt state, without any pressure or pain, and soon becomes as hard as the enamel, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, and arresting the further progress of decay. All persons can use Mr. Howard's Succedaneum themselves with case, as full directions are enclosed. Price 2s. 6d. Prepared only by Mr. Thos. Howard, Surgeon-Dentist, 17, George-st., Hanover-square, who will send it into the country free by post. Sold by Savory, 220, Regent-street; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Starkie, 4, Strand; Butler, 4, Cheapside; Johnston, 68, Cornhill, and all Medicine Vendors. Price 2s. 6d. Mr. Howard continues to supply the loss of teeth on his new system of self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. 17, George-street, Hanover-square. At home from 11 till 4.

1. Their policies cover the risk of living and voyaging over a far larger portion of the globe than do those issued by any other Company in existence. They allow the assured to reside in the Australasian and North American colonies, and at the Cape of Good Hope. They also allow to the assured for the whole of life one passage out and home to any of those colonies. For British India a very moderate extra premium is charged, and the premium is reduced to the English scale on the return of the assured life to England for permanent residence.

of Directors and Alustees; and at Communication of the premiums may remain unpaid for five years; nor is it necessary for the maintenance of the Assurance to pay up the premium at the end of that time, but the unpaid thirds may remain as a debt against the policy, if the interest be regularly paid upon them as the renewal premiums fall due.

• • * This work was undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—viz. a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgment of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one volume royal octavo, of about 1,000 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The First Part—Hindustani and English—contains more words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The Second Part—English and Hindustani—is also by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every advantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive patronage.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE fluctuating conjectures, the doubts and speculations, which have so long prevailed respecting the ultimate fate of the country of the Five Rivers, are now set at rest by an official Notification and Proclamation, from the Governor-General of India, declaring that "the kingdom of the Punjab is at an end, and that all the territories of Maharaja Dhuleep Singh are now and henceforth a portion of the British empire in India," which thus receives an accession of 100,000 square miles, with a population of 3,500,000 souls.

The policy of this important measure, which is pregnant with mighty consequences, for good or for evil, must seek its justification in its necessity, the evidence of which can scarcely be said to be yet before the world. Parliament and the country, however, will soon be put in possession of the necessary facts, and until then all conclusions drawn from superficial views, and general reasons of convenience and temporary utility, will be imperfect and probably erroneous.

Meanwhile, it must be acknowledged that the grounds assigned by the Governor-General, in his Proclamation, are not merely specious; they are strong, and, as they fortify the reasonings which seem to have reconciled the people of this country, and especially those who reside in India. to this strong measure, they will suffice to stop any hasty cavils grounded upon abstract principles.

His Lordship begins by adverting to the long continuance of the alliance which bound the British and the Sikh nations together by the ties of peace and friendship during the reign of Runjeet Singh, whose death was followed by an unprovoked and unjustifiable invasion of the British territories by the Khalsa army, which was driven back with shame, and the Maharaja was reduced to submit himself and his chiefs to the clemency of our Government. The Sikh state, which was prostrate at the feet of the conquerors, was generously spared; the Maharaja was "replaced on the throne;" treaties of friendship were formed between the two Governments, which the British have faithfully and scrupulously observed, but which the Sikh chiefs and people have grossly violated. Peace has been repudiated; British officers have been treacherously seized and murdered; and finally the army of the state and "the whole Sikh people," joined by many of the sirdars who signed the treaties, and led by a member of the Regency, have waged a fierce war for the avowed purpose of destroying the British power.

This catalogue of wrongs and provocations is very formidable, and undoubtedly makes up a goodly body of premises for the conclusion which follows,-that, although the British Government has no desire for conquest, a regard for its own security and that of India constrains it to adopt the only sure means of preventing the recurrence of such acts, by subjecting at once to British rule a people whom their own government cannot control-whom punishment cannot deter from violence, or friendship soothe to peace.

The young Maharaja will be treated with consideration and honeur; the chiefs who have not engaged in hostilities against us will retain their property and rank; the people are to enjoy the free exercise of their respective religions; the property of the rebellious sirdars is to be forfeited; and all the defences of the country, not occupied by the British troops, are to be totally destroyed.

Thus, then, has fallen that powerful state, so skilfully constructed and so miraculously kept together by Runjeet Singh, without any attempt at consolidation. "The most remarkable feature in the policy and internal government of Runjeet Singh," observes his historian,* " is the entire absence of anything like system or principle in his management. His career throughout was that of an encroaching usurper, seizing all within his reach; but what he so possessed himself of, he subjected to no systematic administration." In this his craft and judgment were, perhaps, displayed: an attempt to systematize and consolidate was beyond his powers, and would have subverted his authority. When that authority, which cemented the heterogeneous mass, was withdrawn-or, in the complimentary phraseology of Lord Dalhousie, when "his wisdom no longer guided the councils of the state,"-the government was dissolved into its crude and primitive elements, and all became chaos. The British authorities have now the difficult, the appalling, task of constructing a government in a country which has never yet had one,—a country where the population is hostile to us, and composed of a strange mixture of classes, whose sympathies, national and religious, will be as repugnant to ours as they are to each other's.

When the annexation was resolved upon, Mr. Elliot, the Government secretary, with the Governor-General, then at Forozepore, proceeded with a strong escort of troops to Lahore, where he arrived on the 28th of March, and on the following morning announced to the assembled durbar that Dhuleep Singh had ceased to reign. The members of the durbar, including Dhuleep, put their signatures to a paper transferring the Punjab to the British Government; Deenanath, as he did so, remarking, that "we had slaughtered two lakhs of Sikhs, and finished by seizing their country." When the ceremony of making the country over was completed, a royal salute was fired, and the British flag was hoisted on the most conspicuous parts of the city. The Sikh treasury was transferred to that of the Company; the State jewels are to be sent to England,—the magnificent Koh-inoor, or "Mountain of Light," being designed as a present to her Majesty. The prince, or pageant, Dhuleep, is to reside within the British territories (at Poona, it is said), upon a pension of 40,000l. a year, and his mother is to be permitted to join him, as well as Tej Singh, Deenanath, and Noor-ood-Deen, ex-members of the durbar. The government of the country, as already announced, is to be managed by a council, of which Sir Henry Lawrence is to be president, and Messrs. C. G. Manselland John Lawrence are to be members. The different provincial districts are to be superintended by British officers; and besides the four commissioners named in our last Mail, a cloud of deputycommissioners, civil and military, and assistants, covenanted and uncovenanted, has descended upon the country, the greater number of whom are already at the posts assigned Major George Lawrence, late a prisoner of Chuttur Singh, is to have charge of the territory west of Attock. Invidious remarks are made in some of the papers respecting "the predominance which the brothers Lewrence are to have in the councils of the Punjab."

It is too early to expect any credible evidence as to the feelings of the Silch people—or rather the people of the Punjab, of whom a very small proportion are Sikhs—regarding their transfer from a native to a foreign government. Some apprehensions were entertained of an outbreak at Umritsur, the very stronghold of Sikh fanaticism; whereas it would appear from the following letter, dated 1st April, that the population, including the Akhalees, hailed the new order of things:—

"Last evening, between the hours of half-past six and eight o'clock, this city was illuminated by rich and poor, by Hindoos as well as Mahomedans, in honour of their joy and approbation in coming under British dominion. Some of the officers from the garrison of Govindgurh, who went to witness it, said they had never seen the like before. The great temple, as well as the steps leading down to the Pool, in the centre of which the temple is built, together with the causeway of white marble, which leads to the temple, and the houses around the grand square in which the Holy Pool stands, were all one mass of light; and the effect was grand indeed and most imposing. The whole population was out of doors to witness it. The Akhalees and Sikhs vied with the Khetrees in evincing their loyalty and their allegiance to the new state of things; and last, though not least, the priests of the temple, in their sacerdotal dress, and with their long beards hanging down, chanted hymns of praise and thanksgiving, in honour of their country's having come under British rule and government. It was a sight to be witnessed once in a century."

At Lahore the people are said to be discontented at the annexation. This feeling was so apparent, that it was deemed necessary to detain H.M.'s 32nd regiment, which was to have left Lahore for Jullundur on the 2nd April.

The Governor-General had ordered the disarming of the Sikh population, which had been quietly submitted to where a sufficient force was present, but met with some resistance elsewhere.

The new military arrangements consequent upon the accession of so large a territory, will probably be upon an extensive scale. A rumour is mentioned of an addition of ten regiments to the Bengal army. Another report is, that fifteen regiments from the Madras Presidency, which does not require so large a force as it now maintains, are to take the places of a similar number in the Saugor and Nerbudda territory, which would render any material augmentation unnecessary. The present revenues of the Punjab, not exceeding 1,000,000l., would ill bear the cost of a large military force, in addition to its expensive civil establishment. The force in the Punjab now amounts to 33,000 British troops; that on the frontier and in the Jullundur Doab to 38,000: the grand total of our army on the north-west frontier and in the Punjab together is 71,110 men. We have given a list of the troops as allotted to the various stations within the country.

We now turn to the operations of Sir W. Gilbert, whom we left in our last Summary crossing the Indus, on the 19th and 20th of March, in eager pursuit of the flying Affghans, who, it seems, accelerated their flight by abandoning their baggage. Major-General Gilbert reached Nowshera on the 20th, pushed on by forced marches to Peshawur, with the Bengal division, on the 21st, and took possession of the city and its Bala Hissar, or citadel. He there learned that the Affghans, under Dost Mahomed Khan, had succeeded in getting to Dakka, on the western side of the Khybur Pass, and were consequently beyond his reach. It appears that the gates of the city of Peshawur had been shut against them, but before they retreated from it, they burnt or destroyed the garden-houses, and Sikh cantonment, in the suburbs, and in the Pass they demolished the fort of Jumrood. It was believed that the Khyburries had been bribed to close the Pass against the Ameer; but if so, they were moved by national zeal, a higher bribe, to violate their engagement. The Bombay troops had been directed to stand fast at Peshawur for the present, and cantonments were being marked out. The Afreedees from the hills were carrying on a system of plunder, and had murdered some of our men on their way back from the town of Peshawur to camp. Sir W. Gilbert was to leave for Lahore on the 2nd April, with the 30th N.I. as an escort.

Contrary to general expectation, the Dewan Moolraj has been sentenced to be hanged, along with Narain Singh, on the ground that they were present at the time of the murder of Messrs. Anderson and Agnew, and that Moolraj gave an elephant to the assassin of the latter gentleman. The impression at Lahore seems to be that the sentence will be carried out.

Lord Gough left Lahore for Simla on the 3rd April, having been preceded by Lord Dalhousie, from Ferozepore. It is reported that Sir W. Cotton, the Commander-in-Chief of Bombay, intended to send home his resignation rather than serve under a junior, Sir C. Napier.

Ram Singh, the insurgent who lately disturbed the Jullundur Doab, has been taken prisoner by Golab Singh's people, and handed over to the British authorities.

The King of Oude still continues ill, and his ultimate recovery is considered very doubtful. His Majesty has not left his palace for three months, and everything is falling into disorder.

The local intelligence from the presidencies is without interest. At Calcutta, the only matter worthy of record is the result of a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, to consider the propriety of abridging the usance of exchange. The system of ten months' date bills has been abandoned by common consent, and that of six months' sight adopted in its stead.

At Madras, the journals state, that "a very general spirit of discontent has been diffused throughout the trading portion of the community on account of the diversion of missionary funds by the agents of different societies to trading speculations; that tradesmen find it impossible to compete with the immense capital of these religious corporations, and a loud outcry against its continuance prevails in consequence."

Accounts from Rangoon state that a destructive conflagration had taken place there, which had destroyed a great part of the place. Complaints are made of the arbitrary and tyrannical conduct of the Burmese local authorities towards British subjects and other foreign residents. The last sufferer was a Roman Catholic priest at Rangoon, who was imprisoned, placed in the stocks, and hung up by the heels three times, by the order of a Burmese official, in consequence of his refusal to pay an arbitrarily inflicted fine.

The intelligence from China is to the 31st March, when the excitement was increasing at Canton, as the peroid approached for the opening of the city gates to foreigners. The dealers had entered into an agreement not to make purchases from foreigners until they abandoned their intention of entering the city, or the question was definitively settled. The merchants and shopkeepers had organized a force, ostensibly for the purpose of protecting their property against the numerous disorderly characters with whom the city was crowded. Inflammatory placards against the "barbarians" continued to be posted up in the neighbourhood of the factories, and the gentry and elders remonstrated against the attempt of foreigners to enter the city. It was generally believed that a letter had been received from the Emperor of a favourable nature, and that it refers to another which would immediately follow. It is supposed that much is left to Seu's discretion and management; and the belief gains ground, therefore, that Mr. Bonham would, with his suite, enter the city on the 6th of April, under Seu's protection. It had been ascertained that Captain Da Costa and Lieutenant Dwyer had been murdered. Rewards had been offered to discover the perpetrators of the deed. The Governor of Macao had deported the Chinese officers of Customs who have hitherto been in the habit of collecting duties in the Portuguese settlement.

ANNEXATION OF THE PUNJAB.

Notification. — Foreign Department, Ferozepore March 30. — The Governor-General is pleased to direct that the accompanying proclamation, by which the Punjab is declared to be a portion of the British empire in India, be published for general information; and that a Royal salute be fired at every principal station of the army on the receipt thereof.

By order of the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India, P. Melvill, Under-Secretary to the Government of India, with the Governor-General.

"PROCLAMATION.

"March 29.

"For many years, in the time of Maharajah Runject Singh, peace and friendship prevailed between the British nation and the Sikhs. When Runject Singh was dead, and his widom no longer guided the counsels of the state, the Sirdars and the Khalsa army, without provocation and without cause, suddenly invaded the British territories. Their army was again and again defeated. They were driven with slaughter and in shame from the country they had invaded, and at the gates of Lahore the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh tendered to the Governor-General the submission of himself and his chiefs, and solicited the clemency of the British Government.

"The Governor-General extended the clemency of his Government to the state of Lahore; he generously spared the kingdom which he had acquired a just right to subvert; and, the Maharajah having been replaced on the throne, treaties of friendship were formed between the states.

"The British have faithfully kept their word, and have scru-

"The British have faithfully kept their word, and have scrupulously observed every obligation which the treaties imposed upon them. But the Sikh people and their chiefs have, on their part, grossly and faithlessly violated the promises by which they were bound. Of their annual tribute, no portion whatever has at any time been paid, and large loans advanced to them by the Government of India have never been repaid. The control of the British Government, to which they voluntarily submitted themselves, has been resisted by arms. Peace has been cast aside. British officers have been murdered when acting for the state; others engaged in the like employment have treacherously been thrown into captivity. Finally, the army of the state and the whole Sikh people, joined by many of the Sirdars in the Punjab who signed the treaties, and led by a member of the Regency itself, have risen in arms against us, and have waged a fierce and bloody war for the proclaimed purpose of destroying the British and their power.

"The Government of India formerly declared that it desired no further conquest, and it proved by its acts the sincerity of its professions. The Government of India has no desire for conquest now; but it is bound, in its duty, to provide fully for its own security, and to guard the interests of those committed to its charge. To that end, and as the only sure mode of protecting the state from the perpetual recurrence of unprovoked and wasting wars, the Governor-General is compelled to resolve upon the entire subjection of a people whom their own Government has long been unable to control, and whom (as events have now shown) no punishment can deter from violence, no acts of friendship can conciliate to peace.

"Wherefore the Governor-General of India has declared, and hereby proclaims, that the kingdom of the Punjab is at an end; and that all the territories of Maharajah Dhuleep Singh are now and henceforth a portion of the British empire in India.

"His Highness the Maharajah shall be treated with consideration and with honour. The tew chiefs who have not engaged in hostilities against the British shall retain their property and their rank. The British Government will leave to all the people, whether Mussulman, Hindoo, or Sikh, the free exercise of their own religions, but it will not permit any man to interfere with others in the observance of such forms and customs as their respective religions may either enjoin or permit. The jagheers, and all the property of sirdars and others who have been in arms against the British, shall be confiscated to the state. The defences of every fortified place in the Punjab which is not occupied by British troops shall be totally destroyed, and effectual measures shall be taken to deprive the people of the means of renewing either tumult or war.

"The Governor-General calls upon all the inhabitants of the Punjab, sirdars and people, to submit themselves peaceably to the authority of the British Government, which has hereby been proclaimed. Over those who shall live as obedient and peaceful subjects of the state the British Government will rule with mildness and beneficence. But if resistance to constituted authority shall again be attempted,—if violence and turbulence be renewed,—the Governor-General warns the people of the Punjab that the time for leniency will then have passed away, and that their offence will be punished with prompt and most rigorous severity.

"By order of the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India. "H. M. Elliot,

"Secretary to the Government of India, with the Governor-General."

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES.

From the Commander-in-Chief in India to the Governor-General of India.

Head-Quarter, Camp, Army of the Punjab, Vizierabad, March 25, 1819.

My Lord,—I have sincere satisfaction in forwarding to your Lordship a copy of a despatch received this day from Major-Gen. Sir Walter R. Gilbert, K.C. B., commanding the advanced force of this army, of the 21st inst., announcing the occupation of Peshawur by the British troops; the precipitate retreat of the Ameer Dost Mahomed Khan and his followers beyond the Khyber Pass, and the consequent dissolution of the Afighan confederacy. These brilliant results have been obtained, your Lordship will observe, without a single shot being fired by our troops since the victory of Goojerat on the 21st ult.

It is almost superfluous for me to repeat to your Lordship how very highly I estimate the unwearied and zealous exertions in these subsequent movements of that most energetic and able officer, Major Gen Gilbert, and the excellent troops under his command. In soliciting your Lordship's particular attention to Major Gen. Gilbert's commendation of Major F. Mackeson, C.B., your Lordship's agent with the force, I beg to repeat the high scines I entertain of that officer's merits, and the excellent service he has rendered throughout the campaign.

The Sikh rebellion and Affghan confederacy having been now effectually put down and overthrown. I beg to be favoured with your Lordship's instructions for breaking up the army of the Punjab, which has, I trust, merited the approbation of your Lordship and the country.

I have, &c.

Gough, General, Commander-in Chief in India.

From Major-Gen. Sir W. R. Gilbert, K.C.B., commanding Field Force on special service, to the Adjutant-General of the Army.

Camp, Peshawur, March 21, 1849. Sir,—I advanced this morning from Nowshyra to Peshawur with the Bengal division of my force, and have much satisfaction in reporting, for the information of his Exc. the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief, that I am in possession of the city of Peshawur and its Bulla Hissar.

The Affghan army, under command of Ameer Dost Mahomed Khan, retreated from Peshawur on the 19th instant, and is to-day reported to have reached Dakka on the western side of the Khyber Pass. The city I found untouched by the Affghans, the Ameer having directed the gates to be closed against his troops; but most of the garden-houses in its neighbourhood have been burnt or otherwise rendered uninhabitable, and the Sikh cuntonment at Alli Mardan Khan's Bagh has been burned to the ground. The fort of Jumrood is also reported to be destroyed.

By the expulsion from the province of Peshawur of the Ameer and his army I have carried to a successful conclusion the whole of the instructions of the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India, conveyed to me through his Exc. the Commander'-in-Chief, with your letter of the 3rd of March instant. The Sikhs have been humbled and their power crushed, the British prisoners released from an irksome captivity, and the rich province of Peshawur freed from its Mahomedan invaders. To my troops I am indebted, under Providence, for these glorious results. Since the 1st of the month they have marched from the Jhelum to the Indus and Peshawur, crossing both rivers under many disadvantages, and overcoming all the obstacles of the road, which are naturally great, and were much enhanced by our large train of stores and baggage—the necessary incumbrances of a force like this. To both officers and men I am deeply indebted for their cheerful endurance of the fatigues and privations to which all have been exposed.

I cannot permit myself to conclude this report of my arrival at Peshawur without expressing to his Lordship my sense of the valuable services rendered me by Major F. Mackeson, C. B., who accompanied the force as agent of the Governor-General. I am particularly indebted to him for his ready assistance, and for the unwearied and unremitting zeal with which he has performed the important duties of his office. To his cool judgment and unswerving decision of purpose I owe much of the success that has attended the progress of my force. From my staff, generally, I have received every assistance.

CONCLUSION OF THE WAR.

GENERAL ORDER BY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA.

Foreign Department, Camp, Ferozepore, April 2, 1849. The Governor-General has the gratification of publishing, for general information, despatches which have been received from his Exc. the Commander in Chief, and from Major-Gen. Sir Walter Gilbert, k.c.k., announcing the termination of hostilities in the Punjab.

The Governor-General declared, that, before the war could cease, every enemy, whether Sikh or Affghan, should be driven from before us; and the British army has well and gallantly made good his words. The Sikh sirdars and the remnant of their army were pursued, have surrendered, and have been disarmed. The ameer of Cabul with his troops has fled before the British force, and has been chased ignominiously from the territories he invaded. The war has thus been brought to an end, and the Punjab has been declared a portion of the British empire of India. again the Governor-General offers to his Exc. the Commanderin Chief, to the general officers, the officers, the non-commissioned officers, and soldiers of the army, the assurance of his deep and unfeigned gratitude for the great services they rendered to the country by the zeal and energy they displayed, and for the sustained and cheerful exertions they have made. In anticipation of the wishes of the Hon. Court of Directors, the Governor-General will grant to every officer and soldier who has been employed within the Punjab, in the campaign, to the date of the occupation of Peshawur, a medal bearing the word "Punjab," in commemoration of the honourable service they have done. The Governor-General is also pleased to direct that every corps which has been so employed shall bear the same word on their standards, colours, and appointments. The Governor-General desires to take this opportunity of acknowledging his obligations to officers who have been serving in various positions connected with the army in the field. The Governor-General is sensible of the zeal and activity of Major-Gen. Sir D. Hill, K.C.B., commanding the reserve, and he would have looked with confidence to his services if the division under his command had been called into operation. Brigadier Gen. Wheeler, c.n., has executed the several duties which have been committed to him with skill and success; and the Governor-General has been happy to convey to him his thanks. The Governor-General is indebted to Brigadier Stalker, commanding at Mooltan, for the successful exertions which have been made under his directions for placing the fort again in a condition of defence, and for maintaining the tranquillity of the country. The Governor-General begs to acknowledge the services which have been rendered by Lieut.-Col. M'Sherry, 1st N.I., commanding at Govindghur. The energy, vigilance, and tact which he exhibited during his occupation of that important fortress have been of much value to the Government of India. From Sir F. Currie, Resident at Lahore, previously to his return to his seat in Council, the Governor-General received at all times effective and most ready co-operation; and he has continued to receive from Lieut.-Col. Sir H. Lawrence, K.c.B., the support which his known ability and experience enable him to afford. The meritorious conduct of the several assistants to the resident has elicited the strong approbation of the Government. In addition to those whom he has beforenamed, the Governor-General offers his especial thanks to Major George Lawrence for the able management which so long enabled him to maintain his position at Peshawur, and to Capt James Abbott for the gallant stand he has made in the hills of Hazareh. Lieut, Taylor has earned the full approbation of the Government by his judicious and persevering efforts, which regained and have held the province of Bunnoo. The sustained defence of the Fort of Attock, which was made by Lieut. Herbert under circumstances of great difficulty, has been viewed by the Government of India with admiration, and entitled him their warmest praise. Mr. J. Lawrence, Commissioner of the trans-Sutlej Province, has received the thanks of the Governor-General. Well seconded by his assistants in the district, he has greatly contributed by his promptitude, energy, and firmness, to the maintenance of the general tranquillity which has prevailed in these newly-acquired The Governor-General especially wishes to record territories. his marked approbation of the manner in which Major Mackeson, c.n., as his agent with the army, has discharged the duties which were entrusted to him. In the important political matters in which he has been engaged, Major Mackeson's proceedings have been distinguished by ability, judgment, discre-tion, and firmness; and the Governor-General begs to convey to him the expression of his unequalified satisfaction.

The Governor-General concludes by tendering to the officers of the Government in his camp sincere thanks for the assistance he has at all times received from them. He particularly desires to express his obligation to Mr. Henry Elliot, secretary to the Government of India, for his very able, laborious, and most valuable aid in the important affairs which occupied the Governor-General's attention; and to Col. Stuart, c. B., military secretary to the Government of India, and to Lieut. Col. Benson, c. B., member of the military board with the Governor-General, for the great assistance he has derived from their experience and judgment in the affairs of their respective departments.

While thus congratulating the army and British subjects in India on the triumphant success which has been achieved, the Governor-General desires humbly to acknowledge the hand by which alone all victory is given. He has accordingly intimated to the Lord Bishop his wish that on the first Sunday in May thanksgiving shall be offered to Almighty God for the successful termination of the war in which we have been engaged, and for the restoration to the people of the blessing of peace.

By order of the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India, H. M. Elliot, secretary to the Government of India, with the Governor General.

BREAKING UP OF THE ARMY OF THE PUNJAB.

GENERAL ORDER BY THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

Head-Quarters, Camp, Nangul, March 30. The portion of the army of the Punjab not already disposed of in previous orders will be broken up on the 1st prox., from which date all appointments connected therewith will cease, and the troops will proceed to their respective destinations, in accordance with the instructions promulgated in the General Orders of the 23rd instant.

All commissioned, warrant, and non-commissioned officers withdrawn from staff employ, to serve with the army of the Punjab in any capacity, excepting such as have been otherwise disposed of in previous General Orders, are permitted to return to their respective stations. The siege and spare ordnance and ordnance and artillery park stores will be deposited in the Ferozepore magazine. The engineer park will be broken up, and the stores and material lodged in the Lahore magazine, whence they were originally drawn. The whole of the captured and surrendered guns will be collected at Ferozepore, whence they will be forwarded to Umballah, under instructions with which the officer commanding at Ferozepore will be furnished.

With the sanction of the Right Hon, the Governor-General, the field paymaster, Capt. C. Campbell, is to continue, as at present, to be stationed at Vizierabad, for the payment of the troops beyond the Ravee. The medical depôt now existing at Ferozepore will, with the sanction of the Governor-General, be continued, and the troops beyond the Ravee will be supplied from it with medical stores in the usual manner. The medical stores with the army of the Punjab are to be transferred to the Ferozepore depôt, and such further supplies as may be required to meet the wants of the troops are to be obtained from the Umballah depôt.

The following transfers of general officers are directed: — Major-Gen. W. S. Whish, c.B., from the Punjab to the presidency division; and, with the sanction of the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India, Major-Gen. Sir W. R. Gilbert, K.C.B., will assume the command of the Punjab division, which will comprise, until further orders, the whole of the military stations and posts where British troops are located from the Sutlej to the Khyber Pass, including the province of Peshawur and its dependencies. The head-quarters of the Punjab division will be fixed at Lahore, where, on arrival, Major-Gen. Sir W. R. Gilbert will be joined by the officers of the division staff.

Until the arrival of Major-Gen. Sir W. R. Gilbert at Lahore, the officers commanding in the Jullundhur Doab and at Lahore, and the officers commanding in the other stations in the Punjab division, are permitted to communicate direct with the army head quarters on all matters requiring to be submitted to the Commander-in-Chief.

By order of his Exc. the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief.

PATRICK GRANT, Lieut.-colonel, Adjutant-general of the Army.

MILITARY MOVEMENTS.

General Gilbert has completed the work committed to his charge in first-rate style, and if Dost Mohamed Khan and his boastful Affghans had had but a tenth part of the pluck displayed by the Sikhs, and made but an offer of resistance, the capture of the person of his highness of Cabul would in all probability have been the crowning point of General Gilbert's operations. But the Dost was a coward in 1830 and has 'done nothing to redeem his the crowning point of General Gibert's operations. But the Dost was a coward in 1839, and has done nothing to redeem his character in 1849. He fied in the most inglorious manner, with his Peshawur brothers, and having no doubt bribed the Khaiberees with larger sums than we had offered or paid, he placed the mountains of Alee Musjeed between him and the pursuing foe, and reached Lundee Khana, it is said, on the same day that the British general triumphantly occupied Poshawur. The force passed the Indus on the 19th, and having gone through the Geedur Gullee, a pass from ten to twelve feet ride, and of great length, which the Affghans might have defended against thousands, encamped at Akhora, about twelve miles from Atok. The 20th found the British troops at Naoshera, celebrated as the battle-field between the Sikhs and the Afighens, who were there utterly defeated by Runject Singh in person in 1823, and on the following day the major general had the satisfaction of entering the western capital of the Punjab, and to find that but little damage had been done, barring the destruction of the Allee Murdan garden-buildings (Major Lawrence's house) and of a few of the suburbs, by fire. On the occupation of Jumrood by our force, and also of Kohat, General Gilbert will return, with part of his forces, and make arrange-ments for the Rawul Pindee cantonment. Our latest intelligence from Peshawur is to the 30th of March, when the people of the country, plundering Afreedees no doubt, had resumed the practice which General Avitabile had been compelled to put down with such a high hand. More than one murder had already occurred, and if stringent measures be not adopted for putting down the practice, no man's life will be safe. - Delhi Gazette.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAIL per steamer Oriental, with letters from London to Feb. 24, reached Calcutta on the morning of March 6. The Bombay express did not arrive until six or seven hours after the steamer reached her moorings.

THE COMMAND OF THE TROOPS AT WUZZERABAD, and in advance of the Chensh, except those on special service under Sir Walter Gilbert, is to be exercised by Sir Joseph Thackwell.

RIVERS OF THE PUNJAR.—Two of the Sindh flotilla vessels are, we understand, on their way, one up the Jhelum, and the other up the Indus, and we trust soon to hear that all the rivers of the Punjab, which are so peculiarly favoured in regard to inland navigation, have been carefully explored.

A JESSORE LETTER Says:—"We had a splendid fall of rain on the night of the 20th and morning of the 21st, and it is still to wet to sow in:many places. Many other Jessore concerns have been equally fortunate."

A KISHMAGUR LETTER, dated the 27th March, mentions that to the westward of the station they have had very little rain, but that factories to the eastward have had good sowing rain, and their prospects are very good just now.

their prospects are very good just now.

THE GAZETTE of March 21 contains a draft Act to enable Government to exempt persons in their employment from serving INDIGO CONCERNS. — Three anna shares in the Meergunge indigo concern, Jessore, belonging to the estate of the late A. C. Dunlop, Esq. have been sold at the rate of Rs. 13,000 per anna share, while the interest of the same estate in the Hyrampore indigo concern has sold for Rs. 700.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE N.W. PROVINCES has, it is said, decided to grant no more pensions on the certificate of a single medical man, but to demand the report of a board of medical officers in each case.

PRINCE YASSEEN, the fifth son of Tippoo Sultan, died at Secrole, Benares, on the 15th March, in the sixty-fifth year of his age, leaving behind him a large property.

THE KING OF OUDE still continues very ill; it is said that his doctors are taking good care that he shall not be in a condition to dispense with their services, so that the unfortunate monarch stands but a poor chance of being either killed or cured.

LORD GOUGH left Lahore for Simla on the 3rd April, whither he had been preceded by Lord Dalhousie from Ferozepore the same day.

THE BENGAL ARMY is, the Mofussilite states, to be increased to the extent of ten additional regiments. Our contemporary states that he has been authorized to make this announcement, on what he considers "the very back outhority". Romber Times he considers "the very best authority."—Bombay Times.

Highland Relief Fund.—The balance of Rupees 3,115, left in the hands of the Highland Relief Fund, is to be equally divided between the two kirk sessions in Calcutta, to be applied for the benefit of distressed Scotchmen in that place.

THE BENGAL SEPOYS.—The Englishman has an authoritative contradiction to the calumnious assertion made by some of the Bombay journals that the Bengal sepoys had refused to work in the trenches at Moulton. We hardly thing the story was worth contradicting.—Hurters.

ATLAS INSURANCE COMPANY.—The total loss of the shareholders of the Atlas Insurance Company appears to amount to Rs. 10,000 per share.—Hurkaru. Officers on Staff Employ.—Orders are out for the return to their regiments of nearly all the staff officers who were called from their appointments for active service in the field at the beginning of the late campaign.

LABUAN.—Singapore papers to the 1st March have arrived; they being news from Labuan that there had been no more deaths amongst the Europeans since last accounts, and the sepoy troops kept their health; affairs at Sarawak were prosperous, and fresh settlers were daily arriving, to the extent of upwards of 600 families since the commencement of the present year; preparations were being actively made for an expedition against the Sakarrans, who with the Illanuns, have long been the most formidable of the lawless tribes that infest the coasts of Borneo.

MOULTAN PRIZE MONEY.—The Englishman understands that the original election of prize agents for the Moultan prize property has been ruled as invalid, and that a fresh election is taking place; there are to be lour, and Major Wheeler's reelection is said to be certain.

THE PUNJAB.—Nothing has yet been made officially known regarding the civil arrangements for the government of the Punjah, but it has transpired, privately, that the country is to be placed under a council of which Lieut. col. Sir Henry Lawrence is to be president (an a salary of Rs. 7,000) and Mr. C. G. Mansel and John Lawrence, members (on Rs. 4,000 each per mensem). Four commissioners have been named, viz. Messra, Edw. Thornton, R. Montgomery, D. M'Cleod, and M. P. Edgeworth, with a cloud of deputy commissioners and assistants, amongst whom the following have been already named:—Messrs. F. B. Pearson, P. Fane, W. J. R. Carnac, H. Brereton, Philip Egerton, Edw. Bayley, J. Wedderburn, Brand Sapte, G. F. Macleod, H. B. Henderson, D. Simson, R. Simson, F. D. Forsyth, J. H. Prinsep, A. Money, Couper, &c. The greater part of these officers are already at the posts that are to be assigned to them.— Delhi Gazette.

Mr. H. Inglis.—On the 11th October last, we recorded the substance of certain grave charges of maladministration and oppression brought by the Rev. Thomas Jones, a Welsh Calvinistic Methodist missionary, in the Kossya Hills, against Mr. H. Inglis, assistant political agent of that district. Since that time these accusations have, at the instance of the accused himself, been fully investigated by Mr. Commissioner Dunbar, on behalf of the Government; and the result has been the full and honourable acquittal of Mr. Inglis on all the charges preferred against him. The Government of Bengal has notified its entire concurrence in Mr. Dunbar's decision, and has permitted Mr. Inglis to resume all the official functions from which during the progress of the inquiry he had been suspended.—Hurkaru.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS

Fort William, Home Department, March 8, 1849—Notification.—Major General the Hon. Sir John Hunter Littler, a.c.s., has this day been appointed by the President of the Council of India in Council, with the concurrence of the Right Hon. the Governor-General, to be president of the Council of India a deputy governor of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal, of the fort and garrison of Fort William and of the town of Calcutta, during the absence of the Governor-General from the presidency. The appointment to have effect on the resignation of the Hon.

MOVEMENTS OF TROOPS.

Sir Thomas Herbert Maddock, Knt.

Head-Quarters, Camp, Goojerat, March 9, 1849.—Under the sanction of the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India, the following movements are directed to be made in the order specified:—

44th N.I. from Cawnpore to Allahabad, as soon as the necessary arrangements for the march can be made.

47th N.I. from Etawah and Mynpoorie to Cawnpore, when relieved by wings of the 62nd regiment.

62nd N.I. from Allahabad to Etawah and Mynpoorie, when relieved by the 44th regiment (head-quarters and right wing to Etawah, left wing to Mynpoorie).

SIR THOMAS HERBERT MADDOCK.

Fort William, Home Department, March 12, 1849—Notification.—The Hon. Sir Thomas Herbert Maddock, Knt., having resigned his seat as a member of the Council of India, Major Gen. the Hon. Sir John Hunter Littler, a.c.a., has this day taken his seat as President of the Council of India, under the usual salute from the ramparts of Fort William, and has assumed charge of the office of deputy-governor of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal, of the tort and garrison of Fort William, and of the town of Calcutta, during the absence of the Governor-General from the presidency.

SIR F. CURRIE, BART.

March 12. - The Hon. Sir Frederick Currie, Bart., reappointed by the Hon. the Court of Directors a provisional member of the Council of India, has this day taken the oaths and his seat as second ordinary member of the Council of India, under the usual salute from the ramparts of Fort William.

SALT.

Fort William, March 31, 1849. - On the 31st March, 1817, it was notified in the Calcutta Gazette of that date, that no alteration would be made either in the duty levied on imported salt or in the prices of salt sold by wholesale, on account of Government, before the 1st April, 1849.

The Deputy Governor of Bengal, with the concurrence of the Government of India, has now been pleased to determine, that on and after the 1st April, 1849, the rate of duty to be charged on salt imported by sea, into any part of the presidency of Fort William in Bengal, shall be two rupees and eight annas upon every maund of 3,200 tolahs.

On and after the same date, the whole of the salt in store at the several public depôts will be available at the following wholesale prices, subject in other respects to the rules and conditions now in force; the price in each instance being equal to the fixed duty above mentioned added to the cost of production:-

Hedgellee salt, at the agency depôts ... 310 per 100 mds. Ditto ditto, at Sulkea ... 323 ••• Tumlook salt 322 ... 24-pergunnah ditto, at Baugunder 347 ... Ditto ditto, at Sulkea ... 351 ... ... 329 Chittagong salt ••• ••• Arracan salt, at Kyouk Phyoo ... 303 ... Ditto ditto, at Chitttagong 330 ••• ••• 313 Cuttack salt, at Sulkea ... ... 328 Balasore ditto, at ditto ... ••• ,, Khurda and Chelka ditto, at ditto 341 ••• Madras ditto, at ditto ••• 306

The Government reserves to itself the power of re-imposing the full amount of duty authorized by law, if circumstances should arise to render such a measure necessary. There will be no alteration, however, in the duty now fixed on all salt, whether imported on private account or sold by wholesale on account of Government, before the 1st April, 1854; but the price of salt sold on account of Government, so far as it depends upon the cost of production as calculated upon an average of three years, will be subject to annual adjustment.

Collectors of land revenue and all officers of Government in fiscal charge of districts are hereby directed to make known the substance of this notification as widely as possible.

The Board of Customs, Salt, and Opium, will issue the necessary subsidiary instructions for the guidance of their subordinates in the salt and customs department.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF'S TOUR OF INSPECTION.-The Commander-in-Chief was to proceed on the 17th of April, on a tour of inspection and review through the Mysore and Southern divisions and the provinces of Malabar and Canara, accompanied by the adjutant-general of the army, the quartermaster-general, the judge advocate general, the dep. adj.-gen. H. M.'s forces, and the dep. qu. mast .- gen.

JUVENILE INSOLVENCY .- It appears that eighteen individuals, officers of the Honourable Company at the top, and very humble natives at the bottom, were subjected to the cleansing action of the Insolvent Court in April. There is one case to which attention is drawn, that of Ensign Alston, who has made his appearance in this court twice within the last seven months. He has been in the country altogether about two years, and at the end of the first eighteen months, found himself compelled to ask the assistance of her Majesty's judges in getting rid of his liabilities. The first schedule contained debts to the amount of 3,940 rupees, and the second exhibited a total of 822.

FUNERAL OF LADY STEELE.—The remains of the lamented lady of Brigadier-general Steele, c.B. which had been brought down from Bellary for interment, were, on the 10th of April, deposited in the burial-ground of St. George's Cathedral. Right Hon. the Governor and his staff, with a large portion of that of the presidency, and many other friends of the departed, followed the remains to their last resting-place.

MR. MACLEAN AND THE NABOR.—In the Insolvent Court, March 16, before Sir William Burton, Mr. Maclean appeared, to purge himself from his contempt, in the matter of the bonds held for the repayment of the money advanced to the Nabob of the Carnatic. Mr. Ritchie prayed the release of the insolvent, on the ground that he had delivered up the securities in question (to wit, two notes, for a lakh, and Rs. 50,000 respectively). Sir William Burton instantly ordered the discharge of Mr. Maclean, and directed that Veerapermall Pillay, in whose favour the notes were drawn, should be subpænaed to show what interest he had in the notes, if any, and to assign them over for the benefit of the creditors. It would be quite competent for the Court, if he refused to assign, to file a bill against him and the Nabob. After that assignment was made, whether compulsory or voluntary, it would then be the duty of the official assignee to apply to the Govern-ment for permission to sue the Nabob of the Carnatic, and he, Sir W. Burton, would not contemplate, he could not suppose, that such an application would be refused. It was true, the instru-ments might be null and void, but that did not void the debt.

AGRI-HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY .- The annual exhibition of this society was held in April, and was honoured by the presence of the Governor and the Commander-in-Chief, and several of the leading officials. The number of competitors was larger than on any former occasion, and the samples were considered generally of a superior quality. The higher prizes were awarded to Messrs. Ouchterlony, for Bourbon cotton, first prize, Rs. 500; T. Goolden, Esq. (coffee), prize of Rs. 300; Mr. Daily (coffee), prize of Rs. 200; M Dowell and Co. (best raw sugar), first prize, Best wool specimen, only one competitor, and the Rs. 400. sample obtained the first prize, Rs. 400.

ABSTRACTION OF OFFICIAL RECORDS.—One of the writers connected with the Record Department of the Government office has, it appears, supplied, for a consideration, a bundle of papers belonging to the political department, to an agent of the late Rajah of Tanjore, having reference to the deposition of his master. Out of the present the writer promised to pay something to the servant of the agent, but having failed to fulfil his engagement, the serwant handed over the records furnished by the writer to the chief secretary to Government, who sent the writer to the chief magistrate to dispose of the matter according to law.

FORTHCOMING FESTIVITIES.—A ball, given to Sir H. Pottinger by the ladies of Madras, came off on the 12th of April, in the Banquet Hall, Government House. The arrangements were under the superintendence of Lady Stonhouse.

STREET IMPROVEMENTS.—Steps were being taken to improve the Mount Road by the introduction of lamps. "If," remarks the Spectator, "this improvement have its origin from Sir H. Pottinger, he certainly deserves the thanks of the community for a ' useful light.' "

THE PROPOSED PENITENTIARY BUILDING ABANDONED. It is stated by the Speciator that orders have been received from the Court of Directors for the abandonment of the pile of building designed for a Penitentiary.

SEA CUSTOMS REVENUE .- The Madras U. S. Gazette says, "We understand that Government with advertence to a considerable falling off in the Sea Customs revenue, have directed the collector to reduce his establishment, and that accordingly a reduction from fifteen to twenty per cent. will take place from the established amount."—Athenœum.

GOVERNMENT PLANS FOR NATIVE EDUCATION. expected that the head of the executive in Madras would soon propound some original views upon the subject of Native Education. The governor is understood to entertain very decided opinions upon the question.

THE LATE LIEUT.-COL. HAVELOCK.

An interesting memoir of the late Lieut.-Col. W. Havelock appears in the Bombay Times. We subjoin an abridgment of that portion which relates to his Indian career :

Capt. Havelock exchanged into the 4th Light Dragoons, and with it embarked for Bombay. At Kaira in Goozerat he was brought to the verge of death by fever. His medical attendants had declared there was no hope; the chaplain had administered the holy sacrament; those who lingered at his bedside were waiting for his last groan, when he suddenly turned round and declared that he felt a revival of strength, and expressed his assurance that a cordial would recover him. A draught was administered, the patient got stronger, shook off the fever, and in ten days was training his race-horses on the Kaira course!

He was soon after appointed aid-de-camp to the Commanderin-chief of this presidency, Sir Charles Colville. He returned to Bombay, plunged into all its gaieties—raced, danced, flirted, played, got into the books of his agent, and then paid a visit with his general to Poona, where he married the niece of Wm. Chaplin, Esq., commissioner of the countries recently conquered from the Peislawa. Matrimony can tame even spirits like those of William Havelock. He became gradually an altered man-that is, he thought of the future, reduced his expenses, and parted with his racers, though he still clung to the darling amusement which had with him succeeded to the fascinations of the fox-chase, viz., hunting the wild hog. This sport he still followed with avidity, and was one of the not very many who have succeeded on the parched plains of the Deccan in riding down without aid a black buck. One proof of Havelock's tendency to reform at this period, was his awakened attention to the most useful of the Oriental tongues. He applied with some diligence to the Hindoostanee and Persian, and passed creditably the examination in each. Perhaps it was in an evil hour that he made this exertion; for his success led to his being appointed to the command of a corps of irregular horse,—a nomination which was looked upon in an unfavourable point of view by the officers of the Bombay army, as invading their exclusive privilege and, which gave rise to memorials to the Court of Directors. is not disputed that Havelock elevated the regiment from a very poor state of discipline, in which it had been whilst paid by the Rajah of Sattara, to a very creditable rank amongst irregular horse. But whatever his qualifications might be for a leader of irregulars, it might have been well for him if he had never coveted the office; for, whilst stationed in Cutch with his corps, in 1627, he became involved in a serious personal quarrel with a lieutenant colonel of the Bombay army, the ultimate result of which was, that both parties were dismissed the service by the sentence of a general-court martial. Havelock was the next year pardoned by the King, and restored to his commission. Though this unfortunate affair reflected little credit on his prudence and command of temper, it left not the slightest stain upon his honour; but he suffered severely for his indiscretion, for he had not only a painful ordeal to pass through in India, but a long woyage to make to England, and was now destined, as his family increased, to become acquainted with the miseries of the "res angusta domi." But he met his difficulties cheerfully and turned to India in 1829, where he found his regiment, the 4th light dragoons, located, at Kirkee.

Under much difficulty, Havelock obtained a regimental majority by purchase, paying heavily for it; and finding himself, in 1832, weighed down by compound interest and premium of insurance, he made a journey into the Bengal provinces, with the view of pressing his interest with Sir Edward Barnes, Lord Bentinck, and Sir Frederick Adam. ing to his own presidency, his journey was near being cut short by a severe attack of cholera, which was at that time ravaging Mysore. Recovering, he reached Bombay, and was afterwards employed on the personal staff first of Lord Clare, and again of Sir Robert Grant. But Havelock's health, which had stood early campaigning and dissipation, the fatigues of the camp and the exertions of the chase, and much care and vexation of spirit, and latterly the imprudent habit of making long journeys on horseback under a burning sun, began now to exhibit symptoms of failing; and early in 1836 he was compelled to visit the Cape of Good Hope for its restoration. His friend Sir Harry Smith, now governor, was then quarter-master-general in the colony. By him he was introduced to Lord Elphinstone, then on his way out to govern Madras; and Havelock, partially recovered, went on with him to Fort St. George, in the capacity of his military secretary. Here he had the opportunity of getting rid of a load of debt, and of a little bettering his fortune. his health continued most unsatisfactory, and two squadrons of the 4th light dragoons having proceeded with Lord Keane, under Col. Daly, to Candahar and Cabool, he was deeply mortified at finding himself, for the first time in his life, left in the background on such an occasion. On the return of his regiment to England, his long and meritorious services were, however, remembered kindly at the Horse Guards, and he was appointed, without purchase, 2nd lieutenant-colonel of the relieving regiment, the 14th light dragoons. It arrived at Kirkee, and thereupon Havelock took the most Quixotic and ill-judged step of his whole life. He left his patron and benefactor; and in a fit of zeal volunteered to join his corps.

Havelock was serving under Lieut.-Col. Townshend, when his health once more gave way; and early in 1843 he got hastily on board a steamer, and proceeded up the Red Sea. Gibraltar the mere shadow of a man; he travelled through a part of the Peninsula, and visited the scenes of his Wellingtonian The tour, and afterwards the healing waters of the south of France, so far restored him that he was recognizable by his old light division friends when he set foot again in England; and at the latter end of 1843 we find him hunting with the Duke of Beaufort's hounds. About the time of his return to India, Col. Townshend had revisited Ireland, where he died. Havelock therefore found himself the permanent commander of a splendid regiment of dragoons. His late superior had, in the Peninsula, been an officer so skilful and so bold, that his very faults must be touched on lightly. But it is certain that the reins of discipline had, owing to a cause but too well known, been in his time held with a relaxed hand. Under Havelock the regiment was thought by his superiors rapidly to have regained its efficiency. At the latter end of 1815, when the Sikhs had invaded the British territories, the 14th was put in motion towards the scene of great events, but before it reached the Upper Provinces of Bengal, the Battle of Sobraon had been fought. Nothing remained for Havelock but the labours of peace at Umballa. In the cold season of 1847 the regiment was ordered to be pushed on to Ferozepore, and in the spring of 1848 the Dewan Moolraj of Mooltan struck for independence. The 14th were soon after ordered up to Lahore. The weather was intensely hot, and several of the dragoons died of apoplexy and strokes of the sun. Havelock exerted himself most energetically during the march, and though I he felt the fervors of the season, only remarked jocosely, "that if ever he worked his way up to a title, he should assume that of Lord Salamander." His health remained good; and all at Lahore considered his dragoons to be in the highest order.

An "Army of the Punjaub" was directed to assemble as the cold season approached, but the 14th did not form a part of it. Col. Cureton got the rank of brigadier-general and the command of the whole of the cavalry. When Shere Singh had first deserted our cause, and then, leaving Mooltan, raised the flag of rebellion between the Ravee and the Chenaub, at the head of a powerful force, and our vanguard was pressed forward to observe him, Cureton may be supposed to have been unwilling to leave the corps, which had so nobly served in former days, inactive in Lahore. It is said that he moved the 14th on his own responsibility: howbeit they went on, and Havelock at their head-Cureton pushed Shere Singh's rear-guard out of Goojranwalla, and advanced to the vicinity of Ramnuggur. Soon after, Lord Gough took the field, and with a large force of cavalry and infantry, reached by a midnight march, for the purpose of reconnoitring, the margin of the Chenaub. Shere Singh was posted on the right bank, with 28 guns entrenched. He had the command of a ford, and by means of boats had free access to a sandy island, also swept by his batteries, in which were infantry covered by entrenchments. Then along his whole front he showed considerable bodies of cavalry, who employed all the arts usual in native armies to induce our cavalry to venture within good range of their heavy well-covered guns. The cavalry affair at Ramnuggur is a lesson for soldiers, and posterity will hereafter take care that this lesson is not lost.

On the morning of the 22nd November Havelock seemed a good deal excited. This may be pardoned in an old Sabreur, whose enthusiasm had been pent up in his bosom since the battle of Waterloo. He is said to have worried Cureton with entreaties to be allowed to attack the Sikh horse, who were caracoling in front of the 14th; and more than once to have exclaimed that this day he hoped to win his golden spurs." A troop of our horse artillery had, by opening against the right bank, showed the position of the enemy's guns; and a steady charge of the 3rd light dragoons, aided by light cavalry, had chastised on one point the presumption of the Singhs. Cureton had given his consent to another body of these being attacked by the 14th; and the Commander-in-Chief, riding up to Will Havelock, had said, "If you see a favourable opportunity of charging, charge." Not many minutes after, Will Havelock, "happy as a lover," and sitting as firmly in his saddle as when he overleaped the abbatis on the Bidasso, placed himself in front of his cherished dragoons, and remarking, "we shall now soon see whether we can clear our front of those fellows or not," boldly led them forward to the onset. All who beheld it have spoken with admiration of the steadiness and the gallantry of this glorious gallop. The Singhs made a show of standing the charge, and some of them must have stood well, for sabre cuts were exchanged with effect; but the mass of the Sikhs opened out right and left, and gave way before their victors. Thus the first charge seems to have ended, in which Havelock was not even wounded. We pretend not certainly to know by whose order a second was hazarded, but it seems certain that it was executed; and even regarding the first there had been misapprehension, for as Cureton watched its progress, he exclaimed, "That is not the body of horse I meant to have been attacked;" and, riding to the front, received in his gallant breast a fatal matchlock ball.

Again the trumpets of the 14th sounded, and overturning at first all that opposed them, onwards in the direction of the island they took their course. The Sikh battery opened on them a heavy fire, and there was a descent of some four feet into the flat; but Havelock, disregarding all opposition and all difficulties, and riding well a head of his men, exclaimed, as he leaped down the declivity, "Follow me, my brave lads, and never heed their cannon shot." These were the last words he was ever heard to utter. The dragoons got amongst broken ground, filled with Sikh marksmen, who kept up a withering fire on the tall horsemen, throwing themselves flat on their faces whenever they approached them. After many bold efforts the 14th were withdrawn from the ground. But their commander never returned from that scene of slaughter. It is not yet known exactly how he fell. Probably his charger was struck, and then he would have to contend against fearful odds: in fact, his orderly has related that he saw him lying in the nullah, with several dead Singhs around him. Another dragoon beheld him contending against several of the enemy. Havelock died, and his body remained in the sandy level in the power of the Singhs. He is said to have slain several of them with his own hand on this day.

When Lord Gough's operations had put the British in possession of the right bank of the Chenaub, and not till then, Havelock's body was found. It was recognized fully by the pious care of the Rev. W. Whiting, chaplain with the force. Deep cuts on one leg, both arms, and the fingers of the right hand, asserted the severity of the conflict in which he had sunk. The Singhs had, in their barbarous fashion, decapitated the gallant slain, and eleven of his noble dragoons who had fallen around him. In one of three tombs which are to be seen near the Imambarah at Ramnuggur, from which Runjeet Singh used to review his troops, the two other sepulchres being those of Cureton and Fitzgerald, lies the mortal body of William Havelock.

THE SCINDE HORSE AT GOOJRAT.

In all the published accounts of the battle of Goojrat, there appears a systematic attempt to keep Bombay merit in the background. One signal instance of this is, the treatment which the detachment of the Scinde Irreg. Horse (the only Bombay Cavalry present in the battle) has met with. In the battle of the 21st February all accounts mention that the 9th Lancers and the Scinde Irreg. Horse made a splendid charge, &c. - yet the truth is, that no part of the 9th Lancers charged at all (however ready, willing, and able they may have been), and the Scinde Irreg. Horse was the only regiment which made a regular charge that day. And never was attack more gallantly made, or more completely successful. The facts were as follow:—The detachment of the Scinde Irreg. Horse, about 250 strong (one squadron being away), led by Lieuts. Malcolm, Merewether, and Green, was on the extreme left of the British line, H. M.'s Lancers being the next regiment to its right. A large body (about 4,000) of the enemy's cavalry, about half of whom were Afighans, splendid men, and superbly mounted, led by a son or nephew of the Ameer Dost Mahomed, attempted to turn the British left. This was seen by General Thackwell, who personally ordered Lieut. Malcolm to charge the advancing enemy. The attack was made with such good will and vigour that the enemy's horsemen were completely overthrown, and driven from the field with great loss, their leader killed, with many of his followers, who fought desperately round him, and the right of the enemy's army was completely exposed and turned. The Affghans stood their ground, and fired a tremendous volley at about fifty yards' distance. They and their allies outnumbered the Scinde Irreg. Horse sixteen to one; but nothing could shake the discipline of the latter; no doubt nor hesitation were there, and no sudden "irregular bursts of undisciplined valour shook their formation." The horsemen came on at fiery speed, indeed, and with an individual energy which nothing could daunt; yet they moved like a living wall, and were as much under command as on an ordinary field-day. No mortal foe could have stood before such a charge, which has seldom been equalled in modern war. squadron of the 9th Lancers advanced in rear of the Scinde Irreg. Horse as a support, but its support was never needed, and this squadron of the 9th did not charge; neither did the remainder of that regiment—the business was done by the Scinde Horse alone. - Bombay Times.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE ORIENTAL BANK has declared a first devidend for the year 1848-49 of Rs. 17½ per share of Rs. 500,—this being at the rate of seven per cent. per annum on the paid-up capital of the Bank.

THE MAIL, with letters from London to March 9, reached Bombay April 6.

MILITARY .- It is currently reported " in distinguished military quarters," that amongst the arrangements about to be made, consequent on the annexation of the Punjab, Mhow, Neemuch, Nusserabad, and Mooltan will be garrisoned by Bombay troops. This may or n ay not turn out true—it is spoken of as probable, but of course is mere conjecture. Mooltan, we believe, is sure to fall to our share. By the byc, when the extension fit is next upon us, we shall, of course, require to annex Khyrpore and Bahawulpore to keep up our connection with the north .-A correspondent has drawn our attention to the manner in which the postings and transfers of lieutenant-colonels from one regiment to another has usually been announced by us. We were under the impression that such transfers were effected at the suggestion or wish of the parties themselves; but in this we would appear to have greatly erred; as we are now informed such transfers are made generally without reference to the wishes of any party, on public grounds of convenience. A lieutenant-colonel on the staff, or in Europe, for instance, is posted to a regiment whose major is present, in order that the aforesaid major may retain his command; and lieutenant-colonels present in India, not on the staff, are bandied about like shuttlecocks, from one regiment to another, in order that they may not interfere with majors who, by the rules of the service, cannot be removed .- Bombay Times.

CELEBITY OF THE MAILS.—We do not recollect of any pair of going and returning mails traversing the distance betwirt this and England and back again with such extreme celerity as that which left Bombay on the 3rd of February and reached London on the 3rd of March, in twenty-eight days,—and that which quitted London on the 9th of March, and reached Bombay on the 9th of April. The whole distance home and back was accomplished within sixty-two days, including six days at home, or in fifty-six exclusive of this.—Bombay Times.

H. E. SIR W. COTTON is reported to have tendered his resignation of the commander-in-chiefship of the Bombay army, consequent on the appointment of a junior lieutenant-general to himself to the commander-in chicfship of India.

RETURN OF CASUALTIES AT BOMBAY.—The Telegraph and Courier has published the "Returns of Casualties for the Town and Island of Bombay for the months of January and February, 1849," from which the following is gleaned:—The total number of deaths in January was 948, in February 820. Of these, during the first month, strange to say, not one appears in the column headed "violent:" in the latter, eight are set down. Of these eight, one was a Christian, two were Mahomedans, and five Hindoos. Of the 948 who died in January, there were 66 Christians, 5 Jews, 222 Mahomedans, 62 Parsees, 87 Hindoos not eating flesh, and 506 Hindoos eating flesh. In February, the respective numbers were 59, 1, 191, 47, 75, and 447. Allowing the population of the island to amount to 400,000, the per centages of deaths will be 0.237 and 0.205 respectively.

U. E. I. S. CLUB.—We have much pleasure in announcing that the number of Bombay subscribers to the United East India Service Club now aggregates 683, and that, in reply to a communication from Bombay, the community at Madras have intimated that they have 1,400 names on their list, and that they intend forthwith calling in subscriptions for the past year. The Bombay committee were the first in the field on this point, being anxious to have funds ready at command, so as, when needed, to be available. We believe it has been decided by the committee here, and concurred in by several members, that any officer or party eligible to become a member of the Club shall be held to be disqualified from holding the post of secretary or manager—a decision which we think will be all but generally coincided in for obvious reasons.—Bombay Times.

APPA SAHIB.-Letters from Ellichpore mention that all prospect of a campaign against the pretender, Appa Sahib, had terminated. The brigadier of the Ellichpore division had summoned the pretender to attend him. No attention having been paid to the summons, the troops from Ellichpore marched against him, when Appa bolted, and his followers, some 3,000, dispersed. The contingent troops, nevertheless, proceeded to Oomrawuttee. It was known that, at the time the brigadier's orders reached him, he was in the act of crossing the Wurda river, with his armed retainers, into the Nagpore territory, and he returned a civil message, that, had it been his intention to remain longer in the Nizam's country, he would have waited on the brigadier, but that being on the eve of crossing to take possession of his own, he begged to decline the invitation! He had, however, hardly crossed ere he was attacked by the Nagpore local troops, and driven back across the river, having lost ten or twelve killed. The consequence was the dispersion of all Appa's Vague rumours assert, that a party of Rohillas carried Appa off; others, that the Arabs had him in their possession; and lastly, that he had fled unattended. This last version is likely to be the correct one. The people in Berar persist in saying that he is the real heir to the Nagpore guddee, and that he was acting legitimately in striving to get his own. - Telegraph.

Ensign Palorave.—Amongst the General Orders will be found one authorizing the retirement from the service of Ensign Palgrave, of the 8th N.I. This young officer has recently become a convert to the Roman Catholic faith, and his object, in retiring from the army, is to take orders as a priest. He is said to have marched, the other day, all the way from Rajkote on foot, like a palmer of the olden time! Mr. Palgrave is the son of a baronet, and is a gentleman of agreeable address, sound education, and extensive acquirements.—Ibid.

THE HOOLI.—The offer of two or three small prizes for essays on the disgusting Hindoo festival called the Hooli—the celebration of which still disgraces Bombay—has elicited from educated natives at the presidency some excellent papers on the subject, one of which has been published, and has received favourable notice.—Ibid.

Poisoning.—The acquittal of a woman charged before the Supreme Court at the Criminal Sessions with administering datura, or stramonium, with intent to do some grievous bodily harm, has caused some little discussion amongst us. The judgo held that datura, though producing serious effects for the time and sometimes attended with fatal results, caused no "grievous"-i e. permanent-bodily harm to the sufferer; so that the indictment could not be sustained. The construction thus placed on the law has occasioned some little surprise; and the subject is confessedly one of great general importance, western India being infested with regular gangs of poisoners, and the administering of datura for evil purposes having increased immensely within the last year or two.—Ibid.

SIR C. NAPIER'S "BAGGAGE CORPS."—The Bombay Times, with reference to Sir C. Napier's pamphlet, says : - "Sir Charles then comes to his Scinde hobby, the Baggage Corps; as a theory, it might be good in plan, but that it was the most unhappy of failures in execution that could be conceived is now notorious. Why should not Sir Charles push his doctrines to their legitimate conclusions, and insist on lighter arms and accourrements, and more fitting attire? When he was himself in Scinde the widest departures from the regulations were permitted-no man wore a regimental head-dress who could get anything better, and tulwars took the place of the wretched swords prescribed by the rules of the service. If a law is too oppressive to be kept, it should be repealed rather than broken. Our authorities in India not only overwhelm the army with incumbrances—they kill more men annually than the sword or bullet of the enemy. Let these things be looked to; let it be seen how many lives we sacrifice, and thousands of pounds we throw away, on the most ridiculous of tomfooleries, and the discussion that must follow will ensure us a reform. What can be said of a cap, or shoes, or stock that the soldier throws off the moment he can escape from the torture they inflict on him; of a musket which overloads the bearer, and will not fire; of trousers which the whole Bengal army are allowed to throw aside when on outstation duty; of cloth coats in a country where cotton is the universal wear?"

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

Bombay Castle, April 11, 1849.—The Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to publish the following rules, in supercession of Arts 21 and 22 of the Government Notification in the marine department, dated 6th Dec. 1841 :-

21st. All passengers, whether belonging to the public service or not, are required to make arrangements at Suez, or other intermediate ports, with the commander for the payment of the passage-money before, or at the time, of their embarkations; and it is discretionary with the commander to accept or decline any orders upon houses of agency, or banks, or individuals in Bombay, which may be tendered.

22nd. For the convenience of passengers, the commander is authorised to receive payment of passage-money at Suez, or any port between Suez and Bombay, in sovereigns, Spanish dollars, or German crowns, at the following rates of exchange, viz. sovereigns, at Rupees 11 each; Spanish dollars, at Rupees 2-3-0 each; and German crowns, at Rupees 2-2-0 each. Passengers paying their passage-money in the above coins are allowed, if they please, to give notice in writing to the commanders, pursers, or clerks in charge at Suez, that they intend to pay their passage-money in Company's rupees at Bombay; in such cases the coins they present at Suez are to be held as in deposit only, and, as such, are to be made over by the purser, or clerk in charge, to the military paymaster, immediately on the arrival of the vessel in Bombay harbour, in order that they may be claimed by the parties from the military pay-office; but if not claimed within one week, the parties will be considered to have relinquished their claim, and the deposited coins will be sold on account of Government

By order of the Right Hon. the Governor in Council, J. G. LUMSDEN, Sec. to Govt ..

MONDAY AFTERNOON, 5 O'CLOCK, 16TH APBIL, 1849.—The past fortnight has been characterised by the same inactivity in the import market as that which preceded it, owing to the non-arrival of fresh supplies. Notwithstanding this, the state of both the import and export markets continues healthy. For cotton wool, an increased demand has existed, and large quantities have been purchased for the home and China markets. The money market continues easy, any quantity being obtainable at the banks, on unexceptionable security.

THE LONDON MAIL of Jan. 24 reached Hong-Kong by the Achilles (st.) March 19.

FATAL PIRATICAL ATTACK. MURDER OF CAPT. DA COSTA AND LIEUT. DWYER.—" When the February mail closed," says the Friend of China, March 30, "there existed strong grounds for believing that Capt. Da Costa, of the Royal Engineers, and Lieut .

Dwyer, of the Ceylon Rifles, were murdered in the vicinity of the military station at Stanley, on the south side of the island, distant from Victoria about six miles. These gloomy apprehensions were verified by the discovery of the body of Mr. Da Costa; and from the evidence adduced at the inquest it is clear that two British officers were murdered in cold blood by a nest of pirates, who for years had been domiciled within a mile and a half of the cantonments at Stanley. We are gratified at being in a position solemnly to declare our perfect conviction that no act of the victims themselves does in the slightest degree palliate the crime that was committed." A reward of 100% has been efford that was com-A reward of 1001. has been offered by the Government for such information as shall lead to the conviction of any one or more of the offenders.

MORE PIRACIES ON THE CANTON RIVER.—On the evening of the 10th of March a small vessel belonging to Macao was plundered in sight of the lights of Victoria. A Spanish officer (Lieut. Orense) was driven overboard and drowned. He arrived from Europe that forenoon by the P. and O. Company's steamer Achilles, and was on his way to Macao to secure a passage for Manilla with the mails. There are six vessels of war in the port, and four in the Canton river; people ask how it happens that no attempt is made to capture the pirates swarming in the neighbouring waters and committing depredation on our shores? The question cannot be answered satisfactorily. The admiral is ill; but that cannot prevent the fitting out a launch as a cruiser, and at least clearing our harbour and bays of the scoundrels who plunder trading boats with impunity. If some steps are not taken shortly, there will be a recurrence of the scenes of 1844 and 45, when bodies of 100 men and upwards landed and attacked the stores of merchants situated on the outskirts of the town.-Friend of China, March 30.

OPENING OF THE NEW COLONIAL CHURCH AT HONG KONG. A correspondent of the Friend of China reports "the opening of St. John's Church, Hong-Kong, for public worship, on the 11th of March, being the second anniversary of laying the foundation-stone. All who have in any shape contributed to the erection of the edifice will be gratified to know that we have at length the privilege of Divine worship, in a very handsome and commodious building, well worthy of the name of church, and in every way well adapted for the performance of her services. But through a deficiency in funds, to the amount of nearly 1,000l., the building externally is in a very unfinished state, the tower being left on a level with the roof, without a steeple to distinguish its locality. It is to be hoped that the necessary supplies will soon be raised for the completion of the structure, and to such an amount as would embrace some improvement on our present tame and discordant choral performances; and lastly, though not least in importance, a baptismal font."

THE NEW LAW COURTS .- The Legislative Council has fairly entered upon a crusade against the courts of law. The first blow was struck by an ordinance passed on the 22nd February. By this ordinance certain felonies are to be dealt with summarily—not by a judge, nor by a legally qualified police magistrate, but by what has been termed a "Court of Petty Sessions," where a few gentlemen, or perhaps one gentlemen, sit as both judge and jury. gentlemen, or perhaps one gentleman, sit as both judge and jury. The accused is thus deprived of trial by jury, of legal assistance, and of other privileges to which the meanest subject has an undeniable claim .- Friend of China.

PERSIA.

The Journal de Constantinople of the 14th April gives the following details of the insurrection which broke out on March 12 at Teheran, and which was put down by the firmness of the young Shah : -

"It appears that the reforms attempted to be introduced by Mirza Taghi Khan, the prime minister, had excited against him much ill-feeling on the part of many persons in high stations, who only waited a favourable opportunity to carry out a plot long before arranged. On the night of March 11, four regiments, which had been gained over by the enemies of the state, and which occupied the citadel, repaired to the hotel of the prime minister, and imperiously demanded an arrear of pay due to them from the preceding reign. They were told that their claim should be examined and attended to. They appeared to be satisfied with this reply, and withdrew. But early the next morning they returned, uttering seditious cries, and demanding the dismissal of the minister; if not, they would, they declared, do away with him. The gates of the hotel were at once closed, and Mirza Taghi Khan ordered the guard to fire on them. This was done, and two of the insurgents being killed, the rest withdrew, but with threats to return soon after with larger forces. At ten in the morning the ministers of Russia and England proceeded to the palace of the Shah, and representing to him all the gravity of the situation, endeavoured to persuade him that the crown was in danger if he did not yield to the demands of the insurgents; they consequently conjured him to dismiss his minis-The Shah did not appear to relish this advice, and replied that he would be guided by circumstances. Later in the day, M. de Sartiges, the French minister, visited the Shah, and represented to him the extreme danger of yielding to the injunctions of an insurgent soldiery, and advised him to resist firmly the demand made, and to depend for support on the clergy and inhabitants of his capital. The Shah expressed his readiness to adopt that course; and, having sent for the prime minister and the Iman Juma, a system of resistance was organized, notwithstanding a second attempt on the part of the ministers of Russia and England to persuade him to dismiss the minister. In the course of the afternoon, Mirza Taghi Khan proceeded through the city, followed by a strong escort, the people having taken up arms for the government at the voice of the Iman Juma, and the principal mollahs. In the course of the night, the inhabitants of the country districts round the city flew to arms, and arrived the next morning early. The difficulty of the government then became to restrain these men from attacking the insurgents and taking severe vengeance on them. The population also, it is stated, wanted to massacre the persons composing a foreign mission (it is not said which it was), suspected of being at the head of the plot. Mirza Taghi Khan had great difficulty in preventing so deplorable a catastrophe. In the course of the day, the revolted regiments submitted unconditionally. They left the city, after having sent a deputation to the minister to obtain par-don, which he accorded. The minister took possession of his hotel on the 15th. He was afterwards received by the Shah and treated with great distinction. An investigation of the insurrection has been commenced; several high functionaries have been arrested."

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

At the meeting of the Bombay Branch Royal Asiatic Society, in March, two papers were read; one, "A brief Review of some recent Investigations of the Zend-avesta by German Orientalists," by the Rev. Murray Mitchell; the other, "A Memorandum on some Excavations, apparently Buddhistical, in the Valley of the Chrisna, near Waee," with illustrations, by H. B. E. Frere, Esq., Resident of Sattara.

Mr. Mitchell's paper contained an analysis and brief review of two important articles that have lately appeared in the Journal of the German Oriental Society (Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenlandischen Gesellschaft), the one entitled "Studies on the Zend-avesta," from the pen of Dr. F. R. Spiegel; the other, "The Legend of Feridun, in India and Iran," by Dr. R. Roth. Mitchell remarked that, of the strong light which had lately been thrown on so many portions of the field of Asiatic antiquity, scarcely a ray had rested on the early history, whether civil or religious, of Persia. The two articles above mentioned were on this account most welcome. The one by Spiegel comprises much interesting matter preliminary to an interpretation of the still very enigmatical Zend-avesta, or sacred book of the Parsis. It contains an estimate (an unfavourable one) of the celebrated French version by Anquetil du Perron; it states the actual position we occupy as to the understanding of the Zend avesta, -a point far behind that to which we have now arrived in interpreting the Vedas; illustrates at length the sources from which alone a satisfactory acquaintance with the Zend writings can be drawn, and particularly dwells on the importance of the Pahlvi translation, both in determining the readings of the Zend text, and aiding us in its explanation. Dr. Spiegel's article leaves a strong impression on the mind of the immense difficulties with which the whole of this inquiry is encompassed. The paper by Roth is singularly interesting, as exhibiting a vigorous and apparently successful attempt to establish a connection between the Vedas and the Zend-avesta in a point where no analogy had been suspected. Feridun is one of the most renowned of the earlier heroes of Persian history, and his gallant exploits, as sung by Firdusi in the Shah nameh, are familiar as household words both to the Musulman Persian and the With Feridun and Zohak, whom he overthrew, European writers have generally held that we first emerge out of pure fable into the dawn of true history. Sir John Malcolm iden-tifies him with Arbaces the Mede, the conqueror of Assyria. Dr. Roth, however, has sought to identify Feridun with Trita, one of the old Vedic gods; and if his elaborate and very able analysis be correct, the old Persian hero vanishes (almost without a figure of speech) into air; for Trita is one of those elemental gods, those deifications of natural phenomena, - particularly those occurring in atmosphere, - which constitute the religion of the Vedas in its genuine form. Dr. Roth speaks in strong terms of condemnation regarding the attempt to discover substantial truth in the splendid vision conjured up by the genius of Firdusi. Light can be thrown on early Persian antiquity far better from the Vedas than from the writings of Musulman authors; but this has still to be done, and we must make the humiliating admission that we are at this moment totally ignorant of Persian antiquity as far down as the days of Cyrus. All that Eastern writers relate of the Peshdadian dynasty is mythology, not history; the personages introduced were probably gods worshipped by the Arian race,—they were certainly not men.

The excavations, which are the subject of Mr. Frere's memo-randum, are situated in the southern face of a hill, bearing nearly north of Waee, distant about four miles from that town; and the best landmark for reaching them is a small isolated hill, on the summit of which is a conspicuous Mahomedan tomb, close to The principal cave, which is described, and Sooltanpoor. which has long been used as a temple of Mahadeo, who is worshipped there under the name of "Palkeshwar," or, as the Cunbis call him, "Palkoba," contains in its innermost side a room, or recess, in which there is a dagope, formed of a portion of the original rock left during the excavation of the recess; a rude detached pillar for a lamp stands beside it, and a "nundi" (also a detached block) in front of the dagope, which is now regarded as a gigantic "lingam," and worshipped accordingly as an emblem of Siva. On a bench which runs along the N. W. side as you enter, is a headless "nundi," with several fragments of detached figures, among which may be observed two of the contemplative Buddha. A few paces to the S. E. of the principal cave is another, much decayed and filled with rubbish; and a third cave is observed on retracing your steps, and passing the large cave, for about 200 paces towards the N.W. This has lately been cleared of rubbish. The roof was formerly supported by six pillars, corresponding fragments of which, above and below, only remain. Four cells are described, similar to those seen in the principal cave, and the remnants of four human figures on the right hand side of these cells, as you face them. The figures appear to have consisted of two males, who were seated, and of two females, who are in a standing position: all are now headless. A few paces to the west is a fourth cave, divided into two large cells, from which open five smaller ones; and still further to the west a fifth cave, filled with rubbish, and which is succeeded by the remains of two smaller excavations. Mr. Frere could discover no remains of inscriptions, nor of stucco or paintings, and there appears to be no traditionary account of these caves among the inhabitants of the locality, saving that they were the work of Pandoo, much of whose history appears to be laid in the village of Wace. The existence of other excavations in the extremity of a spur of the Mahabuleshwar Hills, near Punchgunney, terminating near Bowdhun, are mentioned by Mr. Frere; also a large one near Rajpooree, on the other side of that village, about eight miles from Waee. Others are mentioned in the hill of Pateshwar, on the south bank of the Chrisna, six miles from Sattara; and near Pahtun, in the valley of the Konia, north of Chiploon, are said to be excavations. Close to Kudad are between thirty and forty such caves, an account of which Mr. Frere hopes soon to be able to forward to the Society.

Mr. B. H. Hodgson, in a paper published in the last number of the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, has given a curious account of two tribes, the Chepang and the Kusunda, dwelling, nearly in a state of nature, in the dense of forests of the central regions of Nepal, and who have no apparent affinity with the civilized races of that country. They live entirely on wild fruits and the produce of the chase; they have scarcely any implement of civilization; their houses are formed of boughs torn from trees and laid dextrously together. They are not noxious, but helpless; not vicious, but aimless, morally and intellectu-ally. "I am decidedly of opinion," observes Mr. Hodgson, "that their wretched condition, physical and moral, is the result, not of inherent defect, but of that savage ferocity of stronger races which broke to pieces and outlawed both the Chepang and Kusunda tribes during the ethnic struggles of days long gone by, when tribe met tribe in internecine strife, contending for the possession of that soil which they knew not how to fructify." During his long residence in Nepal, Mr. Hodgson could not gain access to the Kusundas, though aided by all the authority of the durbar; but, so aided, he persuaded some Chepangs to let him converse with them for several days through the medium of some Gurungs, on which occasion the obtained an ample specimen of their language. A few of the words appear to have a Tibetan origin, and a still fewer number can be traced to Hindu etymons. He says: "Compared with the mountaineers among whom they are found, the Chepangs are a slight but not actually deformed race, though their large bellies and their legs indicate strongly the precarious amount and innutritious quality of their food. In height they are scarcely below the standard of the tribes around them, who, however, are notoriously short of stature; but in colour they are very decidedly darker, or of a nigrescent brown. They have elongated (fore and aft) heads, protuberant large mouths, low narrow foreheads, large cheek-bones, flat faces, and small eyes; but the protuberance of the mouth does not amount to prognathous deformity, nor has the small suspicious eye much. if anything, of the Mongolian obliqueness of direction or set in the Having frequently questioned the durbar, whilst resident at Kathmandu, as to the relations and origin of the Chepangs and Kusundas, I was invariably answered that no one could give the least account of them, but that they were generally sup-posed to be autochthones, or primitive inhabitants of the country. For a long time such also was my own opinion, based chiefly upon their physical characteristics as above noted, and upon the absence of all traceable lingual or other affinity with the tribes around them; so that I took the Chepangs, the Kusundas, and the Haiyus (a third tribe, remarkably resembling the two former in position and appearance), to be fragments of an original hill population prior to the present Tibetan original inhabitants of these mountains, and to be of Tamulian extraction, from their great resemblance of form and colour to the aborigines of the plains, particularly the Kols. It did not for several years occur to me to look for lingual affinities beyond the proximate tribes, nor was I, save by dint of observation, made fully aware that the Mongolian type of mankind belongs not only to the races of known northern pedigree, such as the mass of the sub-Himalayan population, but equally so to all the abo-rigines of the plains, at least to all those of Central India. Having of late, however, become domiciled much to the east-ward of Kathmandu, and having had more leisure for systematic and extended researches, those attributes of the general subject which had previously perplexed me were no longer hinderances to me in the investigation of any particular race or people. now saw in the Mongolian features of the Chepangs a mark equally reconcilable with Tamulian or Tibetan affinities; in their dark colour and slender frame,—characteristics at first sight, indeed, rather Tamulian than Tibetan, but such as might, even in a Tibetan race, be accounted for by the extreme privations to which the Chepangs had for ages been subject, - and in their physical attributes taken altogether, I perceived that I had to deal with a test of affinity too nice and dubious to afford a solution of the question of origin. I therefore turned to the other, or lingual test; and, pursuing this branch of inquiry, I found that, with the southern aborigines, there was not a vestige of connection; whilst, to my surprise, I confess, I discovered, in the lusty Lhopus of Bhutan, the unquestionable origin and stock of the far removed, and physically very differently characterized, Chepangs! The lapse of a few generations will probably see the total extinction of the Chepangs and Kusundas, and therefore I apprehend that the traces now saved from oblivion of these singularly circumstanced and characterized tribes, now for the first time named to Europeans, will be deemed very Their origin, condiprecious by all real students of ethnology. tion, and character are, in truth, ethnic facts of high value, as proving how tribes may be dislocated and deteriorated during the great transitional eras of society.'

Capt. Kittoe has transmitted to the Asiatic Society of Bengal a Sanscrit MS. of great rarity, entitled the "Polity of Kámandaki," composed about the end of the fourth century before Christ, by a disciple of the celebrated minister, Vishnugupta. It treats, in twenty chapters, of the duties of man, as a member of society; of the principles and form of civil government as prevalent amongst the Hindus; of the rights and privileges of kings and ministers; of the art of fortification; of the principles of military tactics; — in short, of all the branches of political science which engaged the attention of Hindu statesmen at the time of Chandragupta, throwing a light upon the state of civilisation in India about the time of Alexander's expedition.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

FRIDAY, May 25, 1849.

THAT a free press, like every other human institution, is liable to abuse, is a fact for the discovery of which no one, at the present day, would claim credit; but that there are certain modes of abusing it, which, lying beyond the corrective power of the law, are not always regarded as evils, is not so obvious, and to these it is desirable that public attention should be called. The law of libel throws an ample protection around the Government and individuals against direct attacks upon private character, and the prudence of those who now conduct the newspaper press of this country virtually extends that protection to cases of indirect attacks, or general censure resulting not from malice, but from honest motives, misdirected or influenced by imperfect knowledge. Generally speaking, in England, when an error of this kind is committed, and a false impression is created by a report or a paragraph in a newspaper, the evil is susceptible of a prompt, and in most cases an effectual, remedy; because the correction follows instantly; there is too short an interval allowed for the mistake or misrepresentation to lodge in the public mind. If Lord A. or Mr. B. find the επεα πτεροεντα stammered out by him in Parliament misreported in a newspaper the mext morning, he may have what he did really say, or what he supposed he said, or what his friends told him he ought to have said, laid conspicuously before the public, guaranteed under his own signature, the ensuing day, in a letter to the Editor.

The peculiar manner in which the Indian newspapers are supplied with information from remote parts of India, especially on military affairs, does not afford so easy a method of providing against or of correcting errors and misstatements. Their correspondents are not, like those of the London journals, stipendiary, but, we believe, gratuitous; they are not, therefore, under the same control, and it is to be feared that the eagerness and competition for "original communications," in exciting times, render the conductors less scrupulous than they ought to be in the admission of "letters from the camp," and that the wholesome rule is not enforced in India, as in England, of requiring in all cases the guarantee of the real name of the party communicant, not necessarily for publication, but as a voucher for accuracy. It is true that the correspondents on military subjects are mostly, if not exclusively, British commissioned officers, whose high sense of honour, it may be presumed, would furnish a sufficient security against wilful misrepresentation; but it does not afford per se an equally sure safeguard against the adoption of current slander, or that tittle-tattle which is colloquially termed gup, for truth, and the consequences of honest indiscretion or simplicity may in such a case be equally mischievous with those of malicious invention, if such indiscretion or simplicity be not made the instrument of malice.

The evils resulting from this species of misrepresentation by the purveyors of military intelligence for the Indian press are manifold. A mistake (for we leave inventions out of the category), or conjecture, or exaggeration, originating on the banks of the Jelum, or under the walls of Mooltan, is recorded in a "letter from camp;" is printed in an Indian journal; is copied into other Indian journals, and dispersed over India wherever the English language is spoken; it lies germinating in the minds of all who read it for weeks, perhaps months, before it becomes known to the parties whom it concerns, and the contradiction, when it appears, if it ever does appear, seldom eradicates the error, for errors propagate with the rapidity of weeds.

But this is not all. The false report flies upon the wings of the next overland mail to England, whence it is scattered over Europe, America, and our colonies, some pungent "leading article," perhaps, adding venom to the sting. A fortnight, at least, perhaps a month or two, elapses before another mail brings the contradiction, which may be overlooked, or, the matter being forgotten, not inserted in the English papers, and falsehood may thus be engrained.

These reflections have been suggested by the misreports which have from time to time appeared in some of the "letters from camp" during the recent campaign in the Punjab. When no official despatches are published, and whenever we have no communications from known correspondents of our own, we are constrained to rely a good deal upon the private letters published in the Indian newspapers, and are often perplexed between an unwillingness, on the one hand, to compromise corps or individuals by inserting reflections resting upon anonymous authority, and the desire, on the other, not to withhold from our readers matters which, if true, ought to be known.

It will be recollected that, during the Cabul campaign, Sir John Hobhouse brought some severe charges against the anonymous writers in the British army who, as he affirmed, employed their pens in disseminating calumnies, and a still higher authority has very lately denounced the writers of "scraps in newspapers,"—who are officers holding commissions in the British-Indian army,—as having misrepresented the conduct of a royal corps at the battle of Chillianwallah.

From a letter which appears in our present Mail, it will be observed that a stigma, entirely unmerited, has been cast in some of these private communications upon the Bengal sepoys employed at the siege of Mooltan,—an injustice the more cruel since the parties injured are not likely to knew it, and in the absence of any exculpation on their behalf, the slander would pass current for truth. We noticed the statement in the Indian papers, but deemed it just, as well as prudent, to wait for a confirmation of so improbable a report, which, it now appears, has not a shadow of foundation. We could mention other instances in which a similar forbearance on our part has prevented the diffusion of very unjust reports.

It cannot be too strongly inculcated upon the conductors of Indian journals that, by too great an avidity for, and a too indiscriminate adoption of, communications, they may become the dupes of malice as well as of ignorance and indiscretion, and thereby inflict irreparable injury. The only remedy is, to require in all cases the name of the correspondent, in perfect confidence, and upon a pledge that it will never be divulged unless in the case of wilful deception. This would make correspondents more cautious, and the promulgation of the individual's name in a single instance, whilst it would not be too great a punishment, would operate as a sufficient warning.

THE sentence passed by the Court of Queen's Bench upon Captain Charretie, who was convicted in December last of the offence of negotiating the sale of a cadetship in the service of the East-India Company, marks the sense entertained by that Court of an act which the lax morality of society affects to regard as venial. The distinction between offences intrinsically criminal, and offences made criminal by a positive law, is favourable to the laxity referred to. It is argued that the only difference between purchasing commissions in the royal army, which is legal, and in that of the East-India Company, is, that the sale of cadetships in the latter is malum prohibitum only. But this argument is more specious than real. The two cases have little or no analogy. The disposal of commissions in the royal army is in the hands of the Government, and the purchase of them is conducted through the Horse Guards, under strict regulations, which counteract all abuse. The policy of the purchase-system is a distinct question, which has often been discussed and always affirmed. In the case of commissions in the Indian army, the circumstances are altogether dissimilar. The patronage is dispensed by individuals connected with the Home Government of India, under a solemn obligation that the appointments shall be gratuitous. Promotion in the Indian army is placed upon a different footing from that in the royal army, and with reference to the system of appointments. In short, purchase, in the one case, is a necessary part of the scheme by which vacancies are filled up; in the other, it is necessarily excluded. Whether a regulated system of purchase might not be introduced into the ndian army, is a question which has been repeatedly agitated, and always, for the soundest reasons, decided in the negative.

But if the public are led into a confusion of the two cases, ample means are employed to insure parties who receive appointments against the possibility of falling into the error, and against ignorance of the law; and it is for this reason we regret that the weight of the punishment in the event of detection cannot be made to fall upon the purchaser rather than the seller,—the receiver, who really prompts the offence,—rather than, perhaps, a needy agent, excepting the patron who is cognizant of the fraud.

In the present case, a Mr. William Wotherspoon, a writer to the signet (solicitor) at Edinburgh, twenty-five years in practice, having a mind to place his son in the Indian army, paid to a Mrs. Stewart, the widow of an officer in that army, £1,080 for that purpose, and by her instrumentality and that of Captain Charretie with the late Sir William: Young, a Director (also convicted of the misdemeanour), obtained the desired appointment. Now the precautions taken to prevent persons from being entrapped unwarily into these illegal transactions are, as we have said, ample. The paper to be filled up by the party who receives the appointment is headed with a "General Caution," notifying that, if it had been obtained by purchase, all the parties concerned in procuring or receiving it would be liable to prosecution, and would be prosecuted; then there is a declaration to be made by the parent of the appointee, "upon honour," that the appointment was received by him from the Director named therein gratuitously and expressly for his son; then there is a certificate to be signed by the parent, containing a further declaration that he received the appointment for his said son from the Director (expressly named) through his own gratuitous solicitation, and that no money or other valuable consideration was given to any person on account of the nomination; and, lastly, there is a distinct declaration that the party is fully aware that the obtaining such an appointment by purchase was unlawful.

All these documents were executed by Mr. Wotherspoon, senior, a Scotch solicitor of twenty-five years' standing, who must have repeatedly warned clients to read papers before they signed them, who had already given the large sum of £1,080 to procure this appointment, and who had never seen or communicated with the Director from whom he declared he had received the nomination; and this is his explanation of the matter:—

"I think I must have read the formula before I signed it. I had no hesitation to sign the declaration that upon my honour I had received the appointment gratuitously, in consequence of letters: I had received from Mrs. Stewart. I did not read the caution that any purchase would be a criminal act. I did not read one word of the parent's certificate which I signed, and which states that nomoney has been or will be paid for the appointment. I filled up twelve blanks in this, and signed it. I swear I did not read one single line of it. I paid her the money with the view of her using it legally. I did not know it was wrong. I never had an idea that such an Act of Parliament as this could exist."

We have no alternative than, either to give entire and literal credence to this marvellous story, or to conclude these Mr. Wotherspoon has added to the offence of a misdemeanour under the Act, the crime of gross and deliberate perjury.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CONDUCT OF THE BENGAL SEPOYS AT MOOLTAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,-At the siege of Mooltan, it has been stated that the sepoys of the Bengal army refused to work in the trenches. On my arrival in London, the other day, from Mooltan, I was quite surprised to hear this groundless assertion from several friends; and not only that, but that some of the sepoys had tried to corrupt the Bombay troops, and instigate them to follow their example. Now, Sir, I assure you that there is not the slightest truth in either of those reports. I worked with my men in the trenches, and can affirm that there was not a single instance of any Bengal regiment having declined to do trench work. In the regiment to which I belong, I never heard the slightest objection made by any of the men to work during either of the sieges. It was the Bengal sepoys, assisted by her Majesty's 10th and 32nd regiments, who dug the trenches during the first siege, before the Bombay troops came up, and they made the trench in front of the camp to which General Whish retreated (after the first siege was raised), under a heavier fire than we were ever exposed to during the whole time we were before Mooltan.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

CHARLES IRVINE, Ensign,

Edinburgh, 14th May, 1849.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, MAY 3.

The Queen v. Charretie.—The defendant, Capt. Charretie, had been tried and convicted upon an indictment, framed on the 49th Geo. III., c. 126, which charged him with a misdemeanor, in negotiating the sale of a cadetship in the service of the East-India Company. He was this day brought up to receive the judgment of the Court; and after the evidence taken at the trial had been read over, an affidavit in mitigation of punishment was put in by the defendant, and read.

Mr. Crowder and Mr. Warren then addressed the Court in mitigation; and the Attorney-General (with whom were Sir F. Thesiger, Mr. Peacock, and Mr. Forsyth) in aggravation of punishment.

Mr. Justice Patteson delivered the judgment of the Court. He said the defendant had been convicted upon an indictment which, in the first count, charged him with receiving reward and profit from a Mr. Wotherspoon for the sale of a cadetship in the East-India Company's service. The second count, upon which also he had been convicted, charged him with conspiring with Sir William Young, Bart., since deceased, and others, for the sale of the same appointment. The evidence was extremely clear, and showed that Mr. Wotherspoon had been introduced to the defendant by a Mrs. Stewart, and that the appointment had been obtained from Sir Wm. Young, one of the Directors of the East-India Company, on the payment by Mr. Wotherspoon of 1,100l. The sum of 800l., consisting of two bank-notes of 500l. and 3001., had been traced to the possession of the defendant; and these notes were proved to have been two of the notes paid by Mr. Wotherspoon for the nomination. It had been said by Mr. Crowder that there was no moral delinquency in the offence of which the defendant had been convicted, but he (Mr. Justice Patteson) could not subscribe to the doctrine that there was no immorality in contravening this Act of Parliament; though, undoubtedly, the degree of immorality would depend on the circumstances of each particular case. As to the character given of the defendant at the trial, he could not understand how a man of that character could join with others in a transaction of this nature, and then instruct his counsel to say that there was no immorality in it. By his present affidavit the defendant had endeavoured to throw the whole guilt upon Sir W. Young, not by direct assertion that the sum of 800l. was paid to him, but by declaring that he (the defendant) had derived no personal benefit from the money, but that it had been immediately drawn from his bankers', and applied for the benefit of another party. It was true that the defendant's affidavit was made on the 28th of January last, when Sir W. Young was still alive; but it was equally true that at that time no one expected that Sir W. Young would live long enough to be called up to receive the judgment of this Court. It might be true that the defendant had derived no benefit from the payment of the money; but what took place on his examination at the East-India House, though no part of his offence, showed that a person who, like the defendant, had committed an offence, would attempt by prevarication and falsehood to screen himself from the consequences which the law attached to his crime. It was therefore the duty of this Court to pass such a sentence as would show that this beneficial Act of Parliament could not be infringed with impunity, and that the consequences of what he (Mr. Justice Patteson) would almost call peculations of this kind must be ruinous to the circumstances and, for a time, to the liberty, of the offender. It had been stated that a fiat in bankruptcy had been just lately issued against the defendant. The Court, however, must treat him against the defendant. almost as if that fiat had not issued, but not entirely so, for the fine would be somewhat less in consequence. Neither could the Court take into account what had been stated as to the defendant's state of health, for it were to do so, criminals would but too often go unpunished, who ought to contemplate the injury to their health as one of the consequences of their imprison-That, however, might hereafter constitute a ground for some future application. Under all the circumstances of the case, the Court felt bound to inflict such punishment upon the defendant as would deter others from the commission of offences of this sort; and he trusted that the object would be secured when it became known that persons who contravened this beneficial Act of Parliament met with condign punishment. sentence of the Court was that, upon the first count, the defendant be imprisoned in the Queen's Prison for one year, and pay a fine to her Majesty of 800L, and be further imprisoned until that fine be paid; and that he be imprisoned on the second count, for the same year; the imprisonment to be among the misdemeanants of the first class.

The Queen v. Kendall and others.—The defendants, William R. C. Kendall, Maria Binckes, Violet Lindley, and George Bickley, an attorney, had been indicted under the 49th Geo. 3, c. 126, for a misdemeanour in respect to the sale of a cadetship in the service of the East-India Company to one Henry Moore, a son of William Moore, a shipowner at Plymouth. The indictment charged two several offences, and contained in all 18 counts, varying the charges. At the trial, beford Lord Chief Justice Denman, at the sittings after last Hilary Term, the jury found all the defendants guilty.

The Attorney. General now prayed the judgment of the Court upon the defendants.

Mr. M. Chambers, Q. C., moved, on the part of Mrs. Lindley, in arrest of judgment, and also for a new trial. He said that, at the trial, the jury, in the first instance, found Mrs. Lindley guilty on the 14th count; but, in consequence of a suggestion on the part of the Crown, the opinion of the jury was further taken, and they then, in answer to a question put by Lord Denman, said that they found all the defendants but Mr. Bickley guilty in respect to the first transaction, and all but Mrs. Lindley guilty in respect to the second transaction. In consequence of that finding, the verdict, as regarded Mrs. Lindley, had subsequently been entered on the 18th count, instead of on the 14th, as originally found by the jury. The reason was, that the verdict on the 14th count could not be sustained, there being no evidence to connect Mrs. Lindley with the offence there charged. The Crown, therefore, elected to have the verdict entered on the 18th count, which charged the defendants with conspiring to negotiate for the sale of the nomination. He contended that that could not be done, but the verdict ought to have been entered upon the 14th count, as originally found by the jury.

Mr. Serjeant Wilkins, on the part of Mrs. Binckes, stated that, at the proper time, he should beg to be heard in mitigation of punishment.

Mr. Lush, on the part of Mr. Bickley, moved in arrest of judgment, and also for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict, as regarded Mr. Bickley, was against the evidence. He also moved on the affidavit of Mr. Bickley, who stated that, at the trial, he was taken by surprise by the evidence given by the principal witness, William Moore. That witness was one of the defendants on the record, and was the party who had paid the £1,000 for the nomination; but on the morning of the trial he withdrew his plea of not guilty, and pleaded guilty. He was then put into the witness box, and was the principal witness in support of the prosecution. The defendant stated in his attidavit that he was entirely innocent of any guilty participation in the transaction, and that he would be able to prove the fulsehood of the witness Moore's evidence. He also deposed that, on two similar occasions, he had acted as Mrs. Binckes's attorney, and that, in the affair in question, he was only acting professionally for Mrs. Binckes, who was his client.

The Court decided that the rule must be refused on all the grounds, except that stated in the affidavit of Mr. Bickley. The opinion of the jury had been correctly taken as to the particular transactions in which the defendants were shown to have been implicated, and there was no ground for arresting the judgment. The Court, however, would like the matters referred to in Mr. Bickley's affidavit to be further discussed; and for that purpose would grant a rule nisi for a new trial.

Rule nisi granted.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE BENGAL SEPOYS AT THE SIEGE OF MOOLTAN. - Major J. Finnis, 51st Bengal N.I., has written the following letter to the Times: "I have been frequently asked, since my arrival in England from Mooltan, if there is any truth in the report, that the Bengal sepoys refused to work in the trenches during the siege; and my reply has invariably been, that I was present in command of a regiment of Bengal sepoys from the commencement of the siege to the surrender of Moolraj; I took an active part in the operations, but never once heard any cause for such a reflection. The first parallel was opened by the Bengal sepoys on the afternoon of the 7th of September; they were relieved at night by working parties from H.M.'s 10th and 32nd regiments. The sepoys continued to work willingly during the heat of the day, under a heavy fire from the enemy, and with blistered hands, till the siege was raised; hundreds of them had never before handled either pickaxe or fowrah. The sepoys performed their duty in the trenches equally well during the second siege, when they had comparatively little to do, and were less exposed to the enemy's fire. The Bengal sepoys are the same now as they ever have been, when well commanded. Before Mooltan they fought well, vieing with their European brethren in arms, and their whole conduct gave satisfaction to the major-general, the brigadiers, and their immediate commanding officers.

THE CABUL MONUMENT .- A column has been erected at Dum Dum to commemorate the sad calamity which befel the Bengal artillery, during its retreat from Cabul in Nov. and Dec. 1841, and Jan. 1842. It is in the Egyptian style of architecture, 132 feet high, from the summit of which the surrounding country can be seen to great advantage. On the basement there are two black marble tablets, having engraved upon them the names of the officers and men who fell during their retreat. Mr. R. Ackerman, of Regent-street, has just issued a wellexecuted print of the column, having for the back-ground the artillery mess-house, which is the most magnificent of any in India. Before it a band is supposed to be playing. The print deserves the patronage of the officers and friends of the Indian army, and we doubt not it will obtain it.

THE ASSAM COMPANY .- The Report of the Assam Company, submitted at the annual general meeting on the 4th May, gives indications of a favourable turn in its affairs. The accounts for 1848 show an expenditure of 10,300l., instead of 10,900l., as had been anticipated, while the crop, which was estimated at 175,000 lb., has been not less than 210,000 lb., being an increase of 50,000 lb. on the crop of the preceding year. More than half of this tea has realized a gross average of nearly 1s. 11d. per lb.; and assuming the remainder to realize only 1s. 5d., the actual profit to the company on the twelvemonth's proceedings will be 3,000%. Under these circumstances, the local board in India are desirous of an immediate although gradual extension of cultivation, but the London directors consider it inexpedient to make a call for that purpose until they shall have paid off an old loan of 7,000%, and can thus set themselves entirely free from debt, so as thenceforward to apply their profits to the payment of a dividend-a consummation they expect to reach by the operations of next year.

ENGAGEMENT OF SHIPS .- The Minden, Camperdown, Sea Park, Fairlie, Joseph Somes, Ellenborough, and Westminster, have been engaged for the conveyance of troops to Calcutta. The Southampton, for conveyance of stores to Calcutta; Ellenborough, for ditto to Madras; Westminster, for ditto, to Bombay ERBATA.-In the report of the Debate at the East-India House, on the 24th April (p. 277), a few errors occur in the speech of Col. Sykes, who stated that Lieut. Edwardes was settling the country on the banks of the Indus (not in the neighbourhood of Lahore), and that he had 300 horse and a regiment of infantry under him; that, hearing the Bahawulpoor (not our) troops were attacked, he made a forced march to join them, and arrived in time to prevent the overthrow of the Bhawulpoor (not our) force.

SCHISM AMONGST THE BUDDHISTS. - Some of the Singlese Buddhists, according to Col. Low, contend that the present Buddha had no right to enter Nirvána, as his period had not arrived, and that he attained that dignity by practising a deception upon Yakaro Ariya, his elder brother, in the following The two brothers proposed to determine which was manner. best prepared for the divine state by a trial of superhuman power. Two lotus buds were placed before them; turning their persons from them, in opposite directions, they repeated certain sacred formula, and on resuming their positions, it appeared that Ariya's bud had alone blossomed. Buddha, on the pretext of some informality, demanded another trial, and during it, he changed the buds, and thus appeared the victor. Ariya, by his intuitive knowledge, was aware of the trick; but, being of a humane disposition, he said nothing, and permitted his brother to enter Nirvána. Col. Low thinks that this must be some heretical doctrine; "for it can hardly be believed that a religion so based upon morality as Buddhism is, would, at the threshold of its original temples, have tolerated such a breach of

The sculptures of Nineveh, still preserved in such wonderful perfection, tresh in the majority of cases as the day on which they left the sculptor's chisel, notwithstanding the fragility of the material composing them, seem to have been almost entirely used as decorations for the interior of palaces,—covering the walls with bas-reliefs representing great historical scenes in long succession, just as it was customary in our grandfathers' time to ornament the dwellings of kings and nobles with tapestry. palaces themselves appear to have been built of unburnt bricks and mud; their walls were of enormous thickness, not only to ensure stability but to keep out the heat; and their ornaments have now been preserved amongst the ruins, when the far more durable marbles of Greece and Rome have in a third less time been defaced by exposure.

Dry Leaves from Young Egypt; being a Glance at Sindh before the arrival of Sir Charles Napier. By an Ex-Political. Madden.

This is a lively sketch, in the manner of Mr. Warburton, of a country which has been described over and over again by matter-of-fact writers, whose descriptions, however, leave a much fainter impression than this rapid and unlaboured delineation. It would not be difficult to fix the identity of the author; but as he has chosen the anonyme, we shall make no effort to remove the veil. The work bears internal evidence of his talent, and that is all a critic has to do with the matter of authorship.

Every one knows the horrors of the climate of Scinde in the hot season; its various torments are related in these Dry Leaves with the terrible fidelity of a Dante, depicting dolorous regions to which Scinde has not seldom been likened. Take the torment of insects and sand as a sample:—

"The walls of this miserable place (the agency of Shikarpore) being of mud, it was densely peopled by hordes of ants, of all colours, shapes, and sizes. There was the large black fellow who with his colossal pincers could draw blood at the first nip; the diminutive red villains who delight to ensconce themselves by dozens in your hair, or in your cap, especially if tinged with any substitute for Macassar procurable in those regions; the small black, whose desire for mischief surpasses their bulk; and the never-to be-sufficiently-execrated white ants, who, if they had their will, would reduce all created things to impalpable dust.

"As my ears were tormented by harsh sounds (on arriving in

As my cars were tormented by narsh sounds (on arriving in Scinde), so were my eyes excruciated by a continual stream of the finest sand, which pursued our boat across the river, and was ready waiting for us as soon as we landed on the other side. This annoyance commences about eight o'clock in the morning and lasts till evening, when the sand storm generally lulls and resigns the task of persecuting man to myriads of mosquitoes and sand-fies, whose stings could not be brought into operation while it lasted. The Sindhis have an odd story about this. They say that when Sulnimân (on whom be peace) ruled over genii, men, and animals, the mosquitoes brought a complaint against the wind, which they said used them despitefully, and prevented them from following their lawful avocations. Sulnimân heard their complaint with much attention, and expressed a strong desire to see them righted. 'But you know,' he said, 'justice demands that both parties should be heard. Call the defendant into court,' said his majesty. In rushed the wind, and the poor complainants vanished, suit and all, in a moment."

If we abuse the Scindians, they are not a whit behind us in retaliating upon Europeans:—

"A Belúchí gave the following description of us to his tribe: 'There are several sorts of devils in the Feringi army. There is one devil who is black, and who is an idolater, and is altogether detestable. There is a second sort of a white colour, that has no religion at all; and there is a third, who is a good Muslim, and says his prayers as we do.' By this description was intended, first the Hindú, then the European, and lastly the Músulmán."

Our author fights stoutly in defence of the "Politicals," against whom, he says, "an insane yell" was raised. "If anything went wrong, venerable imbeciles shook their heads, and exclaimed against those 'boy-Politicals.'" His shield, however, is thrown around the juniors, who "did but move as their leaders pulled the wires;" of his own leader he records the following anecdote:—

"Before my chief started, he sent for me to give me his instructions, as I was to remain in charge of Sakkar. I expected much sage advice, and the disclosure of his plans to some extent. I was, however, doomed to be disappointed. 'I have sent for you,' he said, with a thoughtful and anxious air, 'to beg you will lay the camel dák with care, and use every exertion in order that the produce of the vegetable garden, particularly green peas, may reach me as often as possible!!'"

He has given some "thoughts on the occupation of Sindh and Affghanistan," from which it is easy to deduce the causes of our failure in the latter country.

But a prominent feature of the work, and we suspect its prime object, is to draw public attention in this country to the case of the Ameers of Scinde, who, according to this writer,—and his opinion is apparently unbiassed and the result of local and personal knowledge of events and actors,—have been treated with great injustice. It is impossible to rise from the perusal of the facts he states without some apprehension that he may be right, and if the Ameers have been wronged, they have been most grievously wronged. He observes:—

"From the first the Amirs of Hyderabád were well aware of the ruin which our entrance into their country foreboded to their family. It is idle bypocisy now to pretend that our design in entering into treaties with them included the slightest glance at their advantage. In vain they protested—'We want no treaties, no alliance; spare us the honour of an ambassador; or, if an officer must be deputed to our court, why then let it be a doctor.' Maugre all their dislike, we were determined to befriend them. The navigation of the Indus promised golden returns; interested persons told us of the fertility of the soil. 'Sindh,' said they, 'is a magnificent country, but crush d by the iron rule of these Belúchi despots. The soil near Hyderabad is favourable for indigo, tobacco, and sugar. At Karáchi, pearls are found; the fishery for them might be rendered most profitable, but the ignorance and folly of the Amirs throw obstacles in the way of all improvement. The whole wealth of the country is in their hands, and in the hands of a few favourites. No other class of people dare exhibit any signs of riches. The Belúchis hold every species of traffic in the greatest contempt, and consider merchants legitimate objects of plunder. The Hindus, by whom all the trade and commerce of the country is carried on, are a despised and degraded race, and are treated on every occasion with the greatest injustice. Under the present government there is no sort of market for goods, no safety for the trader, and no hope of an elevation of the system.' Such were the calumnies poured forth in the greedy ears of the invaders. Had they all been true, we should not have been justified in seizing the country, unless it can be shown that we ought to take a man's coat because he does not choose to mend a hole in it."

"Every one on his first arrival in the Mofussil," says the Benares Magazine, "is immediately struck by the contrast between the universal neatness of an English domicile, and the irregularity and disorder of an Indian bungalow. As we come into a station, we drive through an everlasting avenue of mud walls, designed to preserve from depredation the residence of our Indian gentry, but which object, owing to their dilapidation, they have long ceased to effect. We enter within the compound between two shattered and defaced pilasters, passing which, a dry, arid, irregular expanse stretches out before the visitor. There is one road levelled to admit the approach of a carriage to the house, but it is either formed of the native earth or with kankar. Then there are the hideous godowns, cookrooms, stables, servants' hovels, in general the most prominent objects, built at the very entrance, or stretching their length along one entire side of the compound, inviting the attention of the visitor, as he drives along, to their hideous roofs of broken pantiles, or to their unsightly encasement of tumbling down mud. At the house or the bungalow, the steps at the entrance are covered with servants' shoes, and the verandahs are choked with gram boxes, packing cases, harness stands, old saddles, and miscellaneous articles.

FANS IN CHINA are indispensable; to be deprived of his fan would be a worse punishment to a Chinese, for a time, than to be debarred from food. The constant use of the fan tends not only to the comfort but to the health of the people. The Chinese do not use the fan, like Europeans, in a quick, hurried way, or with much exertion; but easily and quietly, so as, whilst removing the hot air and acting as a refrigerator, to cause no fatigue.

The Chinese language possesses peculiar resources for equivoques. Thus, there is a popular saying that "a government officer has two mouths," meaning that you cannot depend upon his words; but the equivoque is addressed to the eye as well as the mind, the character kwan, 'a government officer,' being formed of the word khow, 'mouth,' repeated, placed under 'a covering.'

"These volumes should be in the library of every one who feels an interest in the recent military exploits of our Army of the Sutlej, or in our future political relations of the Punjab. The work has, indeed, this double value;—it is valuable for present and permanent reference....Independently, however, from any temporary interest which these volumes may derive from the recent events in the Punjab, they present much curious matter to the historical student, as well with regard to the religious character of the sect from which has sprung the warlike race of modern Sikhs, as with respect to the character and policy of Runjeet Singh."—John Bull.

"The work gives all the information on the history and topography of the Punjab that could be desired; and in the fulness and completeness of its details, and the dilligence with which information has been collected, from every available source, constitutes this the best and most authentie work extant on the important country of which it treats."—Britannia.

MPORTANT PATENT IMPROVEMENT in CHRONOMETERS and WATCHES.—E. J. DENT, & Strand, and 33, Cockspur Street, by special appointment Chronometer, Watch, and Clock Maker to the Queen and H. R. H. Prince Albert, and who obtained the high distinction of receiving the Government Reward for the unparalleled performance of the best Chronometer ever submitted to twelve months' public trial, begs to acquaint the public that the manufacture of his Watches, Chronometers, and Clocks is secured to him by three separate patents, respectively granted in 1836, 1840, and 1842.—Silver Lever Watches, jewelled in four holes, £6.6s. each; in gold cases, from £8 to £10 extra.—Gold Horizontal Watches, with gold dals, from £8.8s. to £12.1s. each.—DENT'S "Appendix" to his recent work on "Time-keepers" is now ready for circulation.

O PERSONS PARALYZED, &c.—EXTRAORDINARY CURE by HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—Copy of a letter from Captain E. F. Ferris, commanding Rampore forces, Rohilcund, India, Jan. 15, 1849.—"To Professor Holloway. Sir,—I deem that your wonderful medicines ought to be well known, and I take the liberty of reporting a miraculous cure under my own eye. An old woman had teen for the last two years quite bedridden, having entirely lost the use of her legs from the hip joint. Her limbs were apparently quite dead, and without the slightest feeling, but by the use of your Ointment and Pills she is quite restored. (Signed) E. F. Ferris."

Sold by all venders of medicines, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native venders of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

WESTLEY RICHARDS, Gun Manufacturer, Birmingham, newly-designed and registered Copper Cap.—The advantage and superiority of this cap is from its shape being so formed and enlarged as to cover the base of the cone, the upper part of the cap fitting tight as usual. The improved design prevents capillary attraction, and the priming powder is secure against wet and damp. From its size it is very ready to apply and fasten on the cone in the breech of the barrel. Sportsmen will find this a decided convenience; the mode of Ignition is not altered, the priming is the same material tested for so many years, and will be found in the registered cap doubly certain and unfailing in the field. Disappointment experienced from bad and cheap caps is very annoying. All caps made with light and thin metal, sportsmen should carefully avoid, as there is every probable chance of accident after discharge by the escape of parts blown away at the time of explosion, consequently oftentimes fatal to the eyesight. The registered caps are suitable for all guus manufactured by Westley Richards. Any sizes can be supplied for the guns of other makers. From the patronage these caps have already received, the cost of them will not be increased.—Agent in London: WILLIAM BISHOP, 170, New Bond Street. Guns and rifles forwarded to all parts of India and the colonies with the utmost despatch.

CLEAR and SOFT SKIN.—ROWLANDS' KALY-DOR,—an Oriental Balsamic Preparation, perfectly free from all mineral or metallic admixture. It is distinguished for its extremely bland, purifying, and soothing effects on the skin; while by its action on the pores and minute secretory vessels, it expels all impurities from the surface, allays every tendency to inflammation, and thus effectually dissipates all redness, tan, pimples, spots, freckles, discolorations, and other cutaneous visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, and the softness and delicacy which it induces on the hands and arms, render it indispensable to every toilet. To ladies during the period of nursing, and as a wash for infants, it cannot be too strongly recommended. Gentlemen, after shaving, will find it allay all irritation and tenderness of the skin, and render it soft, amooth, and pleasant. During the heat and dust of aummer, or frost and bleak winds of winter, and, in cases of sun-burn, stings of insects, chilblains, or chapped skin, or incidental inflammation, its virtues have long and extensively been acknowledged. Its puritying and refreshing properties have obtained its exclusive selection by Her Majesty the Queen, the Court, and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and the several courts of Europe, together with the élite of the aristocracy, from the sultry climes of India to the frozen realms of the Can.—Beware of spurious "Kalydder, for sale, containing mineral astringents utterly ruinous to the complexion, and by their repellent action endangering health. THE PROPRIETOR of the LONDON GENERAL THE PROPRIETOR of the LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE begs respectfully to remind families whose bereavements compel them to adopt Mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning may be had at his establishment at a moment's notice. Widow's and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note, descriptive of the Mourning required, will ensure every thing necessary for the occasion being sent immediately, either in town or into the country, and on the most reasonable terms. It is also to be observed that, as both millimers and dressmakers are constantly employed in making up articles in crape (at all times difficult), superiority in mode and unusual neatness may be relied on.

Annual Premium for assuring 1,000 rupees:-

	CIVIL.			TARY AND N	AVAL.
Age. 20 30 40 40 50	With Profits. Rs. 33 38 49 63 82	Without Profits. Rs. 31 35 45 59 77	Age. 20 30 40 50	With Profits. Rs. 38 44 53 66 81	Without Profits. Rs. 35 41 49 61 79

All holders of Policies in India on the Profit scale, who may have paid five annual premiums, will be entitled, at the expiration of the fifth year, to a year's profit, calculated on the average of the preceding five years; such profit to be paid in cash, or to go in diminution of the future premiums payable, or to be added to the sum assured by the pelicy, at the option of the holder, after the calculation of the profits shall have been made in London.

After the expiration of 1851, the profits will be declared annually, and the payers of five complete annual premiums be regularly entitled to a participation therein, with a like option as to the mode of application.

Parties assured in India for Life shall, on their return to England for a permanency, and on the first half-yearly premium becoming due, be entitled to come upon the English rates of premium, and be placed under the rules and conditions of the Society there obtaining.

All parties assured for Life, or for terms other than for Life, whatever the number of payments, or the permanency or otherwise of their residence in Europe, shall, after completing a full year from the date of their quitting India, and on the first half-yearly premium thereafter becoming due, be entitled to a reduction of their premium to the English rates, such reduced rates being continued during their further residence in Europe.

Notices of Assignments of Policies will be duly registered at the Office of the Secretaries.

SOLICITOR.—William Henry Cotterill, Esq.

PHYSICIAN.—G. Burrows, M.D., F.R.S., 45, Queen Anne Street, Cavendish Sq.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will shew the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 10th of May, 1848, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a liberal reduction if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

*a,** This work was undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—viz, a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's sim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgment of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one volume royal octavo, of about 1,600 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The First Part—Hindustani and English—contains more words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The Second Part—English and Hindustani—is also by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every advantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive patronage.

HINDUSTANI GRAMMAR, in the Oriental and Roman Characters, with numerous copper-plate Illustrations of the Persian and Devanagari Systems of Klphabetic Writing. To which is added, a copious Selection of Easy Extracts for reading in the Persi-Arabic and Devanagari Characters, forming a complete introduction to the Bagh-o-Bahar, together with a Vocabulary and explanatory Notes. #### SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE public journals and private letters brought by this mail concur in declaring that the whole of British India, including the Punjab, lately the theatre of an exciting contest, is hushed into a state of profound tranquillity. The only incident of a warlike character that has occurred since the date of the last advices, is an affair between that gallant corps, the Scinde horse, and the Murrees. The particulars of the affair, so far as they are known, are given in the folowing letter :-

"A detachment of the regiment was relieved at Kusmore by a party from head-quarters; hardly, however, had the relieved party left, when the new detachment was attacked by a party of 500 armed Murrees; a duffedar and four men were killed and several wounded. The party which had left heard the firing, and returned in time to succour their comrades, who would otherwise have been either destroyed, or at least have suffered great loss. The whole affair was so sudden that the party, consisting of forty men under a native officer, besides rescuing their comrades, cut up about forty of the Murrees, and took upwards of 1,000 head of cattle, and obliged the robbers to fly to the hills."

The Punjab had become the scene of a vast standing camp; the troops, so lately occupied in conflict, being employed in settling into cantonments, preparatory to the approaching hot season. The troops enjoyed the highest health, the climate, at the two extreme stations, Peshawur and Mooltan, up to the middle of April, being described as delightful. The garrison of Peshawur is formed of the Bombay division, with H.M.'s 61st regiment, and two regiments of Bengal N.I., some irregular horse, and two companies of Bengal artillery, under Colonel Dundas. A small force is to be settled at Jumrood, and all communication through the Khybur Pass is, for the present, interdicted. The rest of Major-General Gilbert's field force were on their march back to the Punjab; their progress had been delayed by the swollen state of the Indus, the bridge of boats having been destroyed by the sudden rising of the river.

Major-General Gilbert had arrived at Rawul Pindee on the 10th April, and resumed his march for Lahore on the following day. A small force was left at Rawul Pindee, which is said to be "one of the finest stations in India." Sir Walter had taken leave of his division in a highly complimentary order, which will be found in a succeeding page.

In the Dherajat, and at Bunnoo, where General Cortlandt had established his head-quarters, the people were quiet and contented; Kohat and all the adjoining provinces seemed well disposed.

The civil arrangements for administering the affairs of the conquered country, though not yet promulgated, were believed to be in a forward state. During the first week of April, roobkarees were issued to the Commissioners, regarding the levying of the revenue of the Punjab, which it was intimated would for the next three years continue to be collected on the same footing as hitherto.

It is now said that there is to be no addition to the regiments of the line of the Bengal army; but that a contingent force is to be raised for the Punjab, consisting of six or seven regiments of irregular horse and seven or eight of foot, to be recruited partly from Sikhs who have not borne arms against us, and partly from Poorbeas (Hindostanis) and Mahomedans; to be officered from the Indian army. The Agra Messenger supplies us with the following information as to the officering of these new corps:—

"The commandants and second in command are already appointed—the following for the command of the cavalry corps: 1. Neville Chamberlain, 16th grenadiers, and Stannus, 5th cavalry. 2. Crauford Chamberlain, 28th N.I., and Brown, 46th N.I. 3. Biddulph, 45th N.I., with 3rd light cavalry, and Weston, 36th N.I. 4. Dawson, 5th N.I., with 11th light cav., and Henderson, 45th N.I. 5. Fitzgerald, of Scinde camel corps, which is to be done away with. Infantry.—1. Coke, 10th N.I., and Willan, 44th N.I. 2. Knox, 43rd light infantry, and Brown, 46th N.I. 3. Morris, 20th N.I., and Reid, 3tth N.I. 4. Campbell, 30th N.I., and Gastrell, 13th N.I. 5. Not yet known. The adjutants are all, it is said, to be taken from the Bombay and Madras services. The above list of commandants and second in command is nearly all selected from passed men."

A rumour, however, still prevailed, that ten new regiments are to be added to the strength of our army.

It appears that, on the 7th April, at a durbar at Lahore, Rajah Shere Singh appeared, and was told that, although his treachery to the State and to the British Government was great, the promise to spare his life would be kept, and some small allowance made for his support. It is added that "the Rajah expressed his gratitude." On the same day orders were issued to Rajah Shere Singh, and Sirdar Chutter Singh, to proceed with their families to Attaree, their native village, and take up their abode there. They were instructed to dismiss all their followers, to give up all their arms, and, when they reached Attaree, not again to quit the place, and never to go more than three or four miles off, when inclined to ride out for the benefit of their health; being distinctly warned that the slightest infraction of these instructions would be visited with the most severe punishment.

On the 8th, Shere Singh and Chutter Singh quitted Shadera for Attaree. Sultan Mahomed was directed to proceed to Bhairoowal to reside; and similar instructions were given as to his abode there.

The Meerut paper states that the guns taken from the Sikhs in the late campaign are to be conveyed in triumph from Ferozepore to Calcutta.

An attempt having been made by a slave-girl of the Ranee Chunda to run away from Lahore, Major M'Gregor had removed the Ranee from that city to Chunar. Mr. John Newmarch, the attorney, of Calcutta, had come forward with some very strong letters in support of the Ranee.

Sir Charles Napier had arrived at Calcutta, and was expected to proceed from thence to Simla, where he would meet the Governor-General and Lord Gough. A report at Kurrachee, that he was on his way thither, had produced the greatest excitement. Sir W. Cotton, the Commander-in-Chief at Bombay, had (as we reported in our last Summary) sent in his resignation, on the ground that he was virtually superseded by a junior Lieutenant-General, Sir C. Napier. He is represented to be extremely popular in the Bombay army.

The Friend of India has published a very long letter, the authenticity of the statements in which the editor states "may be relied on with perfect confidence," which contains "the first clear, accurate, and circumstantial account" of the proceedings of Dewan Moolraj towards Mr. Van Agnew and Lieutenant Anderson, and of the result of the inquiry into his conduct, in which the writer proves, to the satisfaction of the editor of that journal, who had taken a different view of the question, that the Dewan is guilty of being an accessory before the fact to the cruel murder of these two gentlemen. We have given the most important parts of this letter in another page.

The intelligence from the Presidencies is more barren than usual; there is not a topic in the journals of Calcutta, Madras, or Bombay which invites a remark.

LORD GOUGH'S "FAREWELL."

GENERAL ORDER OF THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

Head-Quarters, Camp Skahdera, near Lahore, March 31, 1849.

The Commander-in-Chief in India announces his farewell and adieu to the Army of the Punjab.

The troops which, since October, have been in arms under his command are dispersed to their respective cantonments, and on this, the last occasion of addressing them, Lord Gough desires to place on record his sense of the great services and exertions through which the sway of British India has been now extended over the broad plains and classic rivers and cities of this kingdom. The tide of conquest, which heretofore rolled on the Punjab from the west, has at length reached and overcome it from the east; and that which Alexander attempted, the British Indian army has accomplished. It is with no common pride that the Commander-in-Chief applauds the conduct and the valour which have led to so glorious a result.

The favour and approbation of the country and Government will, without doubt, mark enduringly the estimate entertained of its desert; and no time will efface from the memory of this army, and every true soldier in the field, the high sense of triumph and of the glory with which this campaign has terminated. Undismayed by stern opposition, untired by the procrastinations and delays which circumstances forcibly imposed, or by the great labours and exposure which have been borne so manfully, the army has emerged with a fame and a brightness only the more marked by the trying nature of its previous toils and endurances. The mere battle-day, when every glowing feeling of the soldier and the gentleman is called into action, will ever be encountered nobly where British armies are engaged; but it is in the privations, the difficulties, and endless toils of war that the trial of an army consists; and it is these which denote its metal and show of what material it is formed.

Since the day when at Ramnuggur the too hasty ardour and enthusiasm of the troops first gave signal of the determined character of the war, and of the fierceness with which a mistaken but brave enemy were bent to oppose the progress of our arms, till now that a crushing and overwhelming victory has prostrated at the feet of our ruler and his government an independent, a proud, and a warlike people, Lord Gough, relying upon British courage and endurance, has never for one moment entertained a doubt of the result, nor yielded, even to adverse chances and circumstances, a lurking fear of the successful issue, which true constancy and firmness never fail to attain. The rule which, despite the signal clemency and considerate mercy of the Government, it has nevertheless been found at length necessary to impose upon the Sikhs and their country, has not been thrust upon a defenceless or unresisting people; their valour, their numbers, their means, and preparation, and the desperate energy with which, in error and deceived, the Khalsa and Sikh nation mustered and rallied for the struggle, have been conspicuously apparent; and the army which, in virtue of a most persistive constancy, has reduced such a race and such troops to submission and obedience, merits well the highest eulogium which Lord Gough can bestow.

The Commander-in-Chief lingers upon the severance of those ties which have bound him to that army, the last which in the field it was his duty and his pride to command. Long practice and experience of war and its trying vicissitudes have enabled him to form a just estimate of the conduct and merit of the troops now being dispersed; and the ardour, the vigilance, the endurance, the closing and triumphant bravery and discipline, which have marked their path in the Punjab, will often recur to him in that retirement he is about to seek; and in which the cares, the earnest exertions, and grave anxieties inseparable from the duties of high military command, will be richly recompensed and rewarded by the sense of duty performed, and the consciousness of unwearied and uncompromising devotion to that sovereign and country which, in common with the British Indian army, it will ever be his boast and his pride to have so successfully served.

To every general, to every individual officer and soldier, European and native, of the army of the Punjab, Lord Gough finally repeats his cordial and affectionate farewell. Their persons and services are engraven in his heart and affections; and to those among them who may hereafter, within the brief span of life yet before him, revisit their native country, he tenders the unaffected renewal of that intercourse and friendship which mutual esteem and regard, and mutual dangers and exertions, have produced and established.

FIELD PORCE ORDER BY MAJOR-GEN. SIR W. R. GILBERT, K.C.B.

Camp Peshawur, 3rd April, 1849.

Major-General Sir Walter Raleigh Gilbert, K.C.B., being about to proceed to Lahore, all reports of the troops to be stationed to the West of the Indus will be made from this date to Brigadier-Gen. the Hon. H. Dundas, c.B.

The Major-General embraces with pleasure this opportunity of expressing his entire approbation of the conduct of all branches of the field force, from the day he was appointed to command it until the present moment of making over the immediate command of that portion of it that remains at Peshawur to his second in command Brigadier-Gen. Dundas. It has not been the good fortune of the force to meet the enemy in open fight, but the Major-General sincerely congratulates all under him on the unprecedented success that has attended their untiring efforts to bring the enemy to action. By rapidity of movement he has been enabled to achieve for Government all the advantages that are the usual results of a successful battle. The British prisoners have been released, a large remnant of the Sikh army forced into submission, the province of Peshawur freed from its Mahomedan invaders, and the blessings of peace once more restored throughout these newly acquired dominions. the attainment of these glorious results the Major-General gives to the troops under his command his warmest thanks. He thanks them for their cheerful endurance of fatigue, for their unwearied labour in effecting with rapidity the difficult passage of the Jhelum and the Indus, and above all for their exemplary patience in folfowing, by forced marches, the flying enemy, through the broken ground, and narrow defiles, that intercepted their path on each day's march. The Major-General takes his leave of the field force with a feeling of honest pride at having been selected for so honourable a command; and, in thanking the troops for their good conduct and cheerful endurance of the fatigues and privations they have been exposed to, he bids them farewell, with every good wish for their continued welfare and uninterrupted prosperity.

By order,
(Signed)
H. P. BURN,
Deputy Adjutant-General.

THE PUNJAB.

THE country of the five rivers has been transformed from a general battle-field to a vast standing camp. Our troops, lately engaged in deadly strife, have now no longer any enemy to contend with, and are settling themselves down in their cantonments and preparing against the heats of the approaching season. Chuttur and Shere Singh have, it is said, been directed to proceed to their respective homes, and been assured that if they are ever heard of without a limited circuit of the domiciles assigned them, they will be visited with the punishment due to their past misdeeds, which have for the present been passed over so gently. The troops at Peshawur were reviewed on the 1st by General Gilbert, who took an affectionate leave of them. He left on the 3rd, on his way to Lahore, where he takes command; he was accompanied by her Majesty's 14th light dragoons to the capital. and her Majesty's 30th, on their way to Meerut. The site selected for the cantonments is near the former residence of Major Lawrence, which was burned by the Affghans, and where the Sikh cantonments formerly stood. Officers are to be allowed to make their tents as comfortable as they can, the expense of house building to be avoided as much as possible for the present. The cultivation of rice is forbidden in the neighbourhood, the irrigation required by it engendering malarious damps. There is a small force settled at Jumrood, and no traffic through the Khyber Pass is for the present permitted. At Bunnoo, where General Cortlandt had established his head-quarters, the people were quiet and contented; glad, apparently, that the strife was over, and that they had avoided the insurgent side. Kohat, and all the provinces around, seemed well disposed. There are, it is said, seven regiments of irregular horse to be raised from amongst the disbanded Sikh soldiers, and eight or nine regiments of foot; these are to be officered from the Indian army. There is another rumour that ten new regiments are to be added to the strength of our forces. The late reductions under Lord Hardinge left us some 50,000 more men, and 830 more European officers than we possessed when the Affghan war was determined on in 1838. Within these ten months 18,000 men have been added to the army; 12,000 are, it is believed, to be transferred from Madras, where they are not, it seems, required to do duty in place of the Bengal troops in the Saugor and Nerbudda territory. This, in all, affords a virtual addition of 30,000 to our strength on the north-west frontier, or 40,000, if we add the regiments proposed to be raised,—being 90,000 in all in excess of what we possessed ten years ago, when India waslast, at peace, while the Punjab, Affghanistan, Scinde, and Gwalior had as yet not felt the power of our sword .- Bombay Times, April 21.

Major-General Gilbert was at Attock on the 6th, and arrived at Rawul Pindee with Brigadier Campbell on the 10th. This latter place, it is said, promises to be "one of the finest stations in India." It is 2,500 feet above the level of the sea, and every thing is abundant and cheap. "The General," says the Delhi Gazette, " resumed his march for Lahore on the 11th, and was expected at Jhelum on the 16th—the Brigadier remaining to assume command of the new district committed to his charge. The force at Peshawur had moved to the Sikh cantonments on the west side of the city. A new cantonment was talked of, but nothing had been decided on respecting it. On the arrival on the bank of the Indus of the troops marching towards Lahore, the bridge of boats was found to be destroyed by the rising of the river, and some detention in consequence took The Mofussilite announces, on the authority of a Ferozepore letter, that Shere Singh, on being sent for by Sir H. Lawrence, made his escape. "A party of horsemen," it is added, "were sent in pursuit, but they returned without him." This story, however, receives no confirmation from either the Delhi Gazette or the Agra Messenger. From the native correspondence of the former paper, we gather that on the 7th instant Rajah Shere Singh was present in Durbar, and was told that "his treachery to the State and to the British Government was so great, that he deserved condign punishment, but that the promise to spare his life would be kept, and some small allowance made for his support." It is added, that "the Rajah expressed his gratitude." On the evening of the same day, "orders were issued to Rajah Shere Singh and Sirdar Chuttur Singh to proceed with their families to Attaree, and take up their abode there. They were instructed to dismiss all their followers, to give up all their arms, and when they reached Attarce not again to quit the place, and never to go more than three or four miles off when inclined to ride out for the benefit of their health; they were distinctly warned that the slightest infraction of these instructions would be visited with the most severe punishment. On the 8th Shere Singh and Chuttur Singh quitted Shadera for Attaree. General Sultan Mahomed was directed to proceed to Bhairoowal to reside; and similar instructions were given as to his abode there, as those issued to Chuttur Singh and his hopeful son. We shall see how events turn out; but we cannot help thinking that (even if Shere Singh has not escaped already) mischief will ere long arise from the virtual freedom granted to these rebel chiefs. It appears that during the first week of April roobkarees were issued to the commissioners regarding the levying of the revenue of the Punjab, which, it was intimated, would for the next three years continue to be collected on the same footing as hitherto.—Bombay Telegraph, May 1.

THE DEWAN MOOLRAJ.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—In several recent numbers of your paper you have held up Dewan Moolraj to the world as an object of compassion—as no murderer, and merely a rebel by accident,—as an unfortunate man, in short, who never meditated any evil, but whose unhappy destiny, or, as they say in England, "circumstances over which he had no control," have forced into a war of self-defence, which he has conducted with so much gallantry as, in every generous mind, throws a veil over his errors, and entitles him to be treated by his conquerors "not only with consideration but distinction." That you believe this yourself, I feel convinced, or you would not have propagated it. It is a matter of some importance, therefore, that you should be accurately informed on the subject, and thus have an opportunity of communicating the truth to the public. In the present instance of Moolraj, the premises on which your whole defence of him is founded are false; and, consequently, the conclusion to which they have led you, and to which you have led the public, is a wrong one.

I am not in a position to say what the majority of the public officers in the Punjaub think of Moolraj's crimes, but I should say that only two of them can have had any opportunity of arriving at a complete knowledge of the facts—Sir F. Currie, the late resident, and Major Edwardes, his assistant at Mooltan. Fortunately, however, we are not left to the mercy of any officer's opinions in this matter. The murderer of Mr. Vans Agnew has been detected among the Mooltan prisoners of war; and by the express order of the Governor-General he has been tried by a special military commission. This commission consisted of four British commissioned officers, two native ditto, and one colonel of the Sikh service, and the court was open. The investigation was intensely interesting, and in the course of the proceedings the whole story of the murder of our two lamented countrymen and Moolraj's rebellion was unfolded, and set before the public as vividly as if the past had been reflected in a mirror.

On this trial the following facts were established and made public: - That on the 18th of April Mr. Agnew and Lieut. Anderson reached Mooltan, encamped at the cantonment called the Eedgah, under the north face of the fort, and had an interview the same evening with Dewan Moolraj in the tent of Sirdar Khan Singh Man, the new governor, when it was arranged that the Dewan should make over the fort next day; for which purpose the two British officers on the morning of the 19th accompanied Sirdar Khan Singh to the fort to instal two companies of the Goorkha regiment which had come from Lahore. The officers were shown all over the fort, the keys of which were handed over to the colonel of the Goorkha regiment; the new sentries were posted, and the officers with the new governor prepared to return to the Eedgah. Lieut. Anderson passed out first, followed by Mr. Agnew and Khan Singh, the rear being brought up by Dewan Moolraj and his brother-in-law Rung Ram. The cavalcade issued at the Sheikhee gate of the fort, from which a narrow bridge leads over the deep ditch of the glacis. On this spot was made the first assault. A solitary soldier of Moolraj, named Ameer Chund, here struck Mr. Agnew with a spear under the right armpit (a fatal blow, of which Moolraj is said to have afterwards remarked, that it had brought down the very heavens upon his head). Mr. Agnew was unarmed; but he immediately returned the blow with a riding stick he had in his hand, and dismounted from his horse to close with his cowardly assailant. Ameer Chund took the opportunity to draw his sword and inflict two severe wounds on Mr. Agnew's left arm and shoulder. How did Moolraj act at this moment? Did he call to his guard to seize this single "unauthorised" assassin? No; he slipped away and galloped off to his garden house, the Am Khas, without the fort; and, mark this, that as he went, his own personal sowars broke off, turned back, and pursued Lieut. Anderson, who had as yet escaped; they attacked him, and cut him down with swords; so that he fell from his horse to the ground, where they left him, and he lay till found by some of his own Goorkha soldiers, who put him on a charpoy and bore him to the Eedgah. Meanwhile, Sirdar Khan Singh had rudely bound up Mr. Agnew's wounds with strips torn from his own cloak, after which the sirdar lifted him on to an elephant, mounted by his side, and carried him home to the Eedgah. A sad meeting for the two British officers who had that morning gone forth together full of life, and health, and zeal, to do their duty. The native doctor of the Goorkha regiment then dressed their wounds. This done, Mr. Agnew proceeded to address a letter to the Dewan Moolraj, expressing a generous disbelief in the Dewan's participation; but calling on him to clear himself beyond a doubt by seizing the assailants, and also to come himself to see him (Mr. Agnew) at the Eedgah. After considerable delay, Moolraj sent an answer to this letter by the hand of one of his chief men, Raeezadeh Toolsee Doss, to the effect that it was out of his power to give up the persons who had wounded the British officers, and that he had been prevented by the soldiery from coming to see Mr. Agnew. The letter further stated that there was a great disturbance in the fort, and that the officers had better look to themselves, and take measures for their own safety. Mr. Agnew seems to have behaved with consummate calmness and heroism at this trying moment. He pointed out to Toolsee Dosshow grave a matter was in hand, and how absolutely indispensable it was for Dewan Moolraj to call on him, if he wished to justify himself, and disavow the acts of the soldiers. Toolsee Doss returned to his master, but Moolraj never came. It was necessary to face the stern emergency, and prepare for open hostility on the morrow. That night, under Mr. Agnew's personal direction, the six guns which had come from Lahore were mounted on three batteries, and all the soldiers and camp followers of that luckless expedition called inside the walls of the Eedgah. Morning broke, and Mr. Agnew made one last effort to avert the coming tragedy. Having failed with Moolraj, he now forwarded to Moolraj's officers and chiefs the Purwannahs of the Maharajah to make over the fort to Sirdar Khan Singh, and obey all Mr. Agnew's orders. The chiefs and officers replied that Moolraj was their master, and they would only obey him. Then came the officers of the escort to Mr. Agnew, and informed him of the fact, that Moolraj had called a council of all his officers, and bound them all by solemn oaths to stand by him and fight; the Hindoos and Sikhs putting their seals to the said oath in a leaf of the Grunth; and the Mussulmans in a leaf of the Koran. Mr. Agnew then wrote off to Peer Ibrahim Khan, the British native agent at Bhawulpoor, to bring troops to his assistance, intending to hold his own until this reinforcement could arrive. All disguise was now thrown aside. The guns of the fort opened on the Eedgah; as did also the orderly guns on duty at Moolraj's own house in the Am Khas. Six rounds were fired in return from Mr. Agnew's batteries at the Eedgah, one of which disabled one of Moolraj's guns, and another killed a man; but the gunners refused to go on. The six rounds, however, that they had fired with such effect had made Moolraj doubtful of the issue, if the escort remained faithful, and determined him to practise that eastern precept which bids commanders of armies "to point their swords with gold." He dispatched a trusty officer named Hur Bughwan to Eedgah, on the infamousmission of seducing the escort to the British officers. Hur Bughwan was armed with a written promise from Moolraj to increase the pay of every soldier who would come over; one Goolah Singh, commandant of the Ghorchurrahs with Mr. Agnew, led the way, and went over with Hur Bughwan to Moolraj, who tricked the traitor out with rich gold necklaces and bracelets, and sent him back. It is almost needless to relate the issue. troops, with bracelets and necklaces on one side, and merely duty, loyalty, and honour, on the other. In vain Mr. Agnew bestowed Rs. 1,000 upon the soldiers to encourage them to fight; to bold out, as he said, only for three days. It was honest money, and it was not bracelets and necklaces. By evening all had deserted except Sirdar Khan Singh, eight or ten of Kurrum Ilahee's horsemen, and the Moonshees and domestic servants of the British men, and the Moonsnees and domestic servants of the British officers. Beneath the lofty dome of that empty hall (so strong and formidable that a very few stout hearts could have defended it), stood this miserable group around the beds of the two wounded Englishmen. All hope of resistance being at an end, Mr. Agnew in the evening sent a Vakeel to Dewan Moolraj, asking for peace, and carriage to enable him and Lieut. Anderson to go. Moolraj refused! He was not yet satisfied. The sun went down, and twilight was closing in, when an indistinct and distant murmur arose as of a mass of men advancing. Louder and louder it grew, until it became a cry, the cry of a multitude for blood. On they came, from the city and the fort; soldiers with their arms, Buniyahs, coolies, artisans, young and old, with any weapon they could snatch. A company of Moolraj's Muzabees, or sweepers turned Sikhs, led on the frantic mob. It was an appalling sight, and Sirdar Khan Singh begged of Mr. Agnew to be allowed to wave a sheet and sue for mercy. Weak in body from loss of blood, Agnew's heart failed him not. He replied, "The time for mercy is gone; let none be asked for; they can kill us two if they like; but we are not the last of the English. Thousands of Englishmen will come down when we are gone, and annihilate Moolraj and his soldiers and his fort." The crowd now rushed in with horrible shouts, made Khan Singh prisoner, and, pushing aside the servants with the butts of muskets, surrounded the two wounded officers. Lieut. Anderson was too much wounded to move, and Mr. Agnew was sitting by his bedside holding his hand, and talking in English; doubtless they were bidding each other farewell for ever. Twas now that the prisoner tried before other farewell for ever. Twas now that the prisoner tried before the Mooltan Court, Goojur Singh, a Muzabee, deformed, and the Mooltan Court, Goojur Singh, a Muzabee, deformed, and almost a cripple, an object disgusting to behold, and probably with refined barbarity selected for this reason to add a last indignity to the murder—stepped from the crowd with a drawn sword, and, after insulting Mr. Agnew for a few minutes with every abusive epithet which a foul language can supply to a foul tongue, struck him thrice upon the meck, and with a third blow cut off his head. Some other wretch discharged a musket into the lifeless body. Then Anderson was discharged a musket into the lifeless body. Then Anderson was hacked to death with swords, and afterwards, the two bodies were dragged outside, and slashed and insulted by the crowd. And by whose orders were these unparalleled murders executed? Were they the spontaneous cruelties of a soldiery enraged at the transfer of the province or of a frantic mob of Hindoo citizens for the first time threatened with Feringee rule? Or were they devised and commanded by Moolraj, too late repenting of having resigned his position at Mooltan? Let us follow the blood-stained crowd, and see;—where go they? To the Am Khas. There sits Moolraj in his durbar, already taunting Sirdar Khan Singh, late his rival, now his prisoner. Room for the monster Goojur Singh—the murderer. He approaches; the crowd make way for him as for some good man; and he advances to Moolraj with Agnew's head in his hand. "What reward can Moolraj give for so noble and brave a deed ? Will Goojur Singh accept an elephant -a horsea sword—a pistol—money? He has only to name his own reward." But "he wants nothing—he is content with having served Moolraj!" At last this generous contention ends by Agnew's own horse and pistol, and a handful of rupees being forced upon own horse and pistol, and a natural of rupees of the them there is and long afterwards poor Agnew's servants, peeping from their hiding-places in the suburbs, could see their master's assassin capering through the streets on their master's well-remembered horse. But what became of the head? For well-remembered horse. But what became of the head? For we must go through with it, and the readers of the Friend of India, and all those who compassionate Moolraj, must go of inaia, and an inose who compassionate Mooiraj, must go through with it. Mooiraj directed the head of Mr. Agnew to be thrown into the lap of Sirdar Khan Singh. It was thrown; and the sirdar was told to "take the head of the youth he had brought down to govern at Mooltan." The sirdar, thinking over many kindnesses and benefits he had received at the hands of Mr. Agnew, hand to the tork of the head was immediately taken from him burst into tears. The head was immediately taken from him. The nostrils and mouth were then filled with gunpowder. The moustachios, beard, and hair, wetted and plastered with the same, and then the whole set fire to. And Moolraj was much amused, and the crowd delighted. Other and worse indignities followed, such as I will not repeat; but doubtless the officer who conducted the proceedings of the court recorded them as they appeared, and the proceedings of the court recorded them as they appeared, and were solemnly sworn to on the trial. At last Moolraj was weary of insulting the murdered Englishmen. He ordered them to be buried; and they were laid in a hasty grave among some tufts of grass by the Eedgah where they were killed. But they could not be let alone even here. Twice they were torn up by the people of Mooltan, to rob them of the cloth that wrapped them. A third time they were buried and a sentry placed over the spot, till they were forgotten. were forgotten.

Such, Sir, were the facts which the trial of Goojur Singh elicited, and I have carefully limited my statement to them. Goojur Singh has been sentenced to be hanged—and justly too. Hanging is rather too good for him. But after hearing the evidence, who sees in Goojur Singh more than an instrument—the hideous executioner of another's murderous designs—the hired bravo of Dewan Moolraj?

SUPREME COURT, MARCH 21.

More Supreme Court Defalcations.—Paterson v. Imlach.—Tile Chief Justice delivered the judgment of the Court as follows:—On this application, the contest is on which of two innocent rarties the loss must fall of certain money paid into the Master's effice in this cause, which, with some other moneys of suitors, las been misappropriated and lost in the office of the late Master of the Court. When Mr. Grant's case was ripe for decision, I was the sole member of the Court, and I was not then nor had I teen previously aware that any moneys of suitors in practice remained in his hands. I have always considered the money-rules of the Court, as to the office of the Master and Accountant-General of the Court, to have been framed with the express object of preventing any moneys coming into the actual possession of the Master; and I was not aware of any relaxation of them in practice; nor can we see the necessity or propriety of any such relaxation, unless as to the mere temporary possession of a deporelaxation, unless as to the mere temporary possession of a deposit during the progress of sale, which may require to be impounded until it can be paid over to the credit of the cause in the Treasury of the East-India Company. When the state of the actual past custody of these moneys, and their loss, became known to me, which was not until after Mr. Grant's departure for England. I directed Mr. Magnharon to report full the the for England, I directed Mr. Macpherson to report fully on the subject to me, which that officer accordingly did, and that report was forwarded by my direction to Mr. Grant in England, for his answer to it. In consequence of some delay in the service of the proceedings on Mr. Grant in England, his receipt of them was retarded, and his answer consequently has not yet been received by the Court, but the Court has been informed by Mr. Grant that his answer will shortly be forwarded, and the judges In the interim forbear to express any opinion on the propriety of the actual receipt, or the retention, or the mode of custody, of the moneys, or upon their abstraction.

Let it be assumed that the actual receipt by the Master was regular, and his continued possession of this money, which was not a mere deposit, but the full purchase-money on a completed contract, no breach of duty, still we cannot view that receipt and possession as constituting itself the payment of the money into Court. The purchaser could not, in strictness, have insisted upon being let into possession until the money was paid into Court. Either party, whilst the money was actually in the possession of the Master, might have moved in Court that the money should be paid into Court, and on that motion it must have been paid into the Treasury of the East-India Company, in the manner directed by the rules of Court.

The question, however, does not turn on this, whether Mr. Grant's possession was really equivalent to payment of the money into Court, but whether the complainant, who was alone entitled to the fund, has not so treated it, and has not dispensed with the more secured custody provided for by the rules of the Court, and which he might have obtained upon application to the Court by motion. This very cause presents an instance of such a motion made and granted. The party entitled to the money knew that it was in Mr. Grant's custody, acquiesced in that possession, transferred the possession of the lands with that knowledge, and received part of the purchase money from Mr. Grant, whereas, if it had been paid into Court, it could not have been paid out again without an order of the Court. In Equity, on the confirmation of the report and the payment of the money into Court, the money is viewed as belonging to the vendor, the land as belonging to the vendee, before the actual payment of the money out of Court, and before the execution of the conveyance. Here the conveyance is actually executed, and with full knowledge as to the custody of the money, and it recites that the money was paid into Court. Both parties so treat it, and the money therefore must be viewed as that of the complainant, and the loss must fall on him; since there would be no equity in keeping alive a lien on the estate or conveyance in favour of two innocent parties, whose laches equally contributed to the loss of the money, and who must be taken to have both acquiesced in the arrangement which resulted in the loss. As to the lot purchased by Mr. Lackersteen, a purchase in the same cause, the attorneys being also the same, there is sufficient evidence by the same knowledge, acquiesence, and laches, and there appears to us to be no real distinction between the cases.

The application should be granted so far only as relates to the delivery over of the conveyance; but we think, on the evidence now before us, that we cannot direct Mr. Macpherson to certify that the money was duly paid into the office of the Master of the Court, because, by giving such a direction, we should be indirectly sanctioning a mode of payment which, though it may have been pursued under the belief either that particular decrees warranted it in particular cases, or that the Court had given it a judicial sanction in general, appears to us to be directly opposed to the rules of the Court; and, as far as we can judge, was not sanctioned by any special order in this case, as to this money; but if the applicant will be satisfied with a certificate that the money was paid to the then Master, Mr. Grant, we see no objection to such a limited certificate being given.—Star, Mar. 22.

A short time ago, when noticing the statement that Mr. W. P. Grant's counsel were sanguine as to his success in reversing the order of the Supreme Court for his suspension, we remarked that we had good reason to believe, whatever might be the decision of the Privy Council, that he would not reclaim his office. Those who peruse the aforegoing report will have understood why we gave that opinion. We knew of this case, which directly implicates Mr. Grant in his office of Master in Equity, and we had previously alluded to others, in one of which an offcial communication from the Board of Control had been made to the Court.

In the aforegoing case, a certain sum was paid into Mr. Grant's hands as Master, and the question was, which of the parties should suffer the loss occasioned by his default. The Court decides that, as the Master held the money contrary to the rules of Court, with the knowledge of the parties, and as the complainant who was entitled to receive it could at any moment have obtained an order for its payment into Court, he must be held to have acquiesced in the arrangement, and must bear the loss. This decision, as between party and party, is equitable; but there are others to be considered, namely, the judges. They were publicly warned of the dangerous trade carried on by the Master two years before the final catastrophe; they were called upon to check proceedings so deeply involving the interests of suitors and the honour of the Court; they would not interfere. Even to the very last, when the Ecclesiastical Registrar's misappropriations were published, three months' time was given to him to make the most of his position. The Court, having then so resolutely backed its officers against the public, ought most certainly to pay the losses occasioned by their own misconduct. In this instance it is said that the suitors, paying the money to Mr. Grant, contrary to a rule of Court, deserve to suffer; but who in this community will be found daring enough to withstand the officer who is so much in favour with the Court that he was allowed to carry on a most hazardous, and as it turned out, ruinous, business? It appeared by the proceedings in this case that other transactions of the same kind are known to the Court; but the Chief Justice says that Mr. Grant having been written to for an answer to the report made to the Court by the officiating Master on these transactions, and the answer not having yet been received, he forbears expressing any opinion on them. This is considerate, for, if we mistake not, there is a particular Act of Parliament relative to Masters in Chancery, which makes misappropriation on their part a most serious offence. It is, therefore, no more than justice to give the suspended officer an opportunity of explaining if he can. But no explanation can possibly show that the business of the office was conducted as it ought to have been, or will exonerate the Court from heavy responsibility, for suffering its officers, in the face of public and repeated warning, year after year, to make their public situations mere conveniences for carrying on their private speculations.- Englishman, March 23.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MAJOR-GENERAL WHISH is to command the presidency division.

H. M.'s 96TH REGIMENT were daily expected from New South Wales.

OPIUM. - At the sixth opium sale of the season, held April 14, Patna brought Rs. 1,052, and Benares Rs. 1,024 per chest-an increase on the last sale of Rs. 52 for Patna, and Rs. 10 for Benarcs. The proceeds of the sale were nearly 31 lakhs.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE. — The annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce took place April 16. Mr. C. B. Skinner was elected president, and Mr. W. W. Kettlewell vice-president, vice Messrs. H. Cowie and J. J. Mackenzie. The ten vacanvice Messrs. It. Cowie and J. J. Mackenne. The ten vacancies which existed in the committee were filled up by Messrs. S. A. Apcar, J. Deffell, L. Balfour, H. E. Braddon, D. Cowie, J. Findlay, D. Jardine, W. W. Kettlewell, G. May, and R. S. Palmer. The monthly receipts of the Chamber were Rs. 395, and the expenses Rs. 472; but notwithstanding this, the accounts were passed as "satisfactory," in the hope that the next year would show a better state of things.

THE MONTHLY EXPENSES OF THE UNION BANK IN LIQUIDA-TION are said to exceed Rs. 3,000.

MAJOR HERBERT EDWARDES, C.B., has been appointed secretary to the council at Lahore.

Two preventive officers, named Kiernander and Smith, were drowned in the Hooghly, on Sunday (April 15), by the upsetting of a boat in which they were proceeding to the Diamond Harbour station. - Hurkaru.

IDENTITY OF MOOLRAJ.—It is said, and bets are made on the question in the north-west, that the person in custody at Lahore as Moolraj, is not the real Simon Pure, who is represented to be still lurking in his own country, preparing to give us a little more trouble.

ACCIDENT TO COL. SLEEMAN .- The Star mentions, on the authority of a Lucknow letter of the 4th April, that Colonel Sleeman had met with a severe accident that morning, and broken a thigh bone.

THE RE-UNION OF THE SCINDIAN LADIES with their exiled lords will tell against the assertion of the historian of the conquest, that the princesses were glad of the opportunity of escaping from the power of their tyrants; unless, indeed, it is to be regarded merely as an indication and illustration of that forgiving spirit which distinguishes the softer sex.

LOCALITY FOR A CANTONMENT. - From the camp of General Sir W. Gilbert, near Jumrood beyond Peshawur, we learn that a committee had been appointed, of which Brig.-Gen. Campbell was president, to examine the neighbouring ground, and that between Peshawur and Jumrood generally, for the purpose of selecting a suitable locality for a cantonment. The general was to have left Peshawur on the morning of the 2nd April, accompanied by H. M.'s 14th light dragoons, proceeding to Lahore, the 30th on their way to Meerut, and the troops to be stationed at Rawal Pindee. — Delhi Gazette, April 11.

THE MAIL (express from Bombay), with letters from London to May 9, reached Calcutta April 14.

HYPOTHECATION.—The Gazette of April 7 announces that supplies on account of the Home Treasury will continue to be raised on hypothecation during the ensuing official year to the amount of 900,000!, and the advance will be to the extent of three-fourths of the value of the goods which form the security.

THE REV. J. WHITING, the zealous and humane chaplain to the army of the Punjab, has been appointed chaplain to the Governor General.

LIEUT.-COLONEL SYKES has presented Mr. James, who was a volunteer with Major Edwardes before Mooltan, with a cadetship.

A PURNEAH LETTER mentions, on the 4th April there was a shower of hailstones there as big as oranges!

THE KING OF DELHI. - It is generally understood that the king has at length acceded to the terms proposed to him. repairs of the palace are likely to be commenced upon, the bond fide debts of the king are being inquired into, and other arrangements are in progress. It may be in the remembrance of our readers how indignantly Mr. George Thompson denied the receipt of any pecuniary compensation from the king, when taxed with the fact in the House of Commons by the Hon. Mr. Elliot, now Secretary to the Board of Control. A native friend, who knows something of what is going on in the palace, assures us that Mr. George Thompson's receipts for the money have been found amongst the papers that were to be made over by the king as vouchers for the verification of his assurances regarding certain debts. We hope the document, provided our informant is correct, may be taken charge of by the agent, when it comes before him, for transmission to the authorities at home. Elliot will find a use for it, we have no doubt. - Delhi Gaz., April 4.

HIDDEN TREASURE. - The Delhi Gazette states, that a letter from the Ranee of Lahore to Shere Singh has been intercepted, and its contents translated. They are to the effect that a crore of rupees is buried at Shaikpoora, which may be taken by Shere Singh. Should this account prove correct, the British Government will probably avail themselves of the treasure to lighten the expenses of the war.

SALT.-Mr. Watkins has discovered a saline spring in Deyrah Dhoon, which has excited his hopes of obtaining salt in that district to a great extent.

CHOLERA .- A statement has been published respecting the cholera which is deserving our best attention, in a country so liable to the scourge as India. It is affirmed that the same condition of the air which produces cholera diminishes the power of the loadstone, and that this difference becomes so great as to be easily registered; of course, should the assumption prove correct, it would be easy to prognosticate the approach, culmination, and departure of the disease, and thereby enable the physicians to take precautionary measures with greater certainty. The discovery proves, moreover, that the disease is in the air, and therefore not contagious; a fact which, when clearly demonstrated, would be a source of great relief to those whose relatives or friends are visited with the calamity.

RAM Singh, who opposed General Wheeler, is now a prisoner in Kote Kangra, and will probably be hanged.

Uniting the Jumna and Sutles. - The Englishman mentions a plan for uniting the Jumna with the Sutlej, which is considered practicable. The canal would commence at Kurconsidered practicable. The canal would commence at Kurnaul, on the Jumna, and join the Sutlej near Loodhiana. The expense is estimated at twenty-five lakhs. The intermediate district has been already surveyed by Major Baker of the engineers. Such a work would greatly increase the value of those provinces, and turn the greater part of the trade of the Punjab into a new channel.

Administrator-General .- The Act for the appointment of an Administrator-General las at length become law, together with the obnoxious clause. The treatment which the representations the obnoxious clause. of the public in India have experienced is enough to cure them of petitioning the Government for any alteration in their determination. A slight change has been introduced with regard to the individual upon whom the office may be bestowed. former drafts the office was to have been reserved for the lawyers; but the clause which directed this limitation has been removed, and the Government has the power of appointing a civilian to the post.

A MARBLE PAGODA. -- We perceive from the Benares Recorder that a rich native of the Agra presidency is about to build a stupendous marble pagoda in the noblest style of Hindoo architecture; the whole edifice is to be covered with gold leaf. The sum to be expended is said to be enormous—we should think enough to have constructed a very good road for many miles; an undertaking which would assuredly prove more useful than the one contemplated, and might earn Parruckjee as much honour among his own countrymen.

JOBBERY.—The Englishman furnishes some curious particulars of a piece of jobbery lately perpetrated. The 12th regiment N.I., of which Col. Weston is lieut.col., has been lately stationed at Allygurh, and the 62nd, Col. Pemberton, at Allahabad. The command of the garrison of Allahabad is worth Rs. 700 a month, and it was desired that the advantage should to the share of Col. Weston, yet without any direct affront to Col. Pemberton. The 44th, then at Cawnpore, were ordered to change places with the 62nd; Col. Pemberton was further posted to Etawah, and lastly Col. Weston was transferred from the 12th to the 44th, and thus obtained the prize. Col. Weston, we doubt not, is an officer most perfectly worthy of the situation, but in order for him to obtain it, three regiments have been moved about, one of them the 62nd, in a sickly condition, and three commanding officers slighted.—Friend of India.

GUNS IN THE POSSESSION OF THE SIKHS.—The following extract from the Hurkaru explains more fully than any we have yet seen, the number of guns in the possession of the Sikhs:

" Guns taken from the Sikhs during the present Campaign :-62 Taken at Mooltan Found in Govindghur 52 ••• ... Captured at Chillianwallah 12 ••• ••• ••• at Gujerat 52 ••• ••• ••• ,, ... at Chineout 2 ... ••• ••• ... at Jubba ••• ••• ••• ••• Surrendered ••• ••• ••• Found by Mackeson

These, with some 25 or 30 more, still upon the ramparts of Lahore, and the 253 taken or surrendered in the Sutlej campaign, will, as the correspondent observes, make up the full number of 500 pieces of ordnance which the Sikhs were said to have possessed before they first went to war with their British neighbours."

CHEAF FOOD.—A friend writing to us from Burissal states, that this has been an unprecedented year as it regards the difficulties of Zemindars. The exuberance of the crop, and the consequent cheapness of corn, have rendered it difficult for the ryots to pay up their rents. Rice has been selling in the interior of the district a little above the rate of three maunds for the Paddy has been so abundant and so cheap that they have been obliged to offer to pay their rents in kind. Several of the gomastas of the zemindars, who have been more active than others in their demands, have been murdered. On referring to the table of the market price of grain from 1700 to 1846, which we published nearly two years ago, we find that during the last century and a half, rice has never been sold so cheap as our correspondent mentions, that is, three maunds for the rupee, or a shilling a cwt., except in one year, that of 1714.-Friend of

THE SCOTTISH MISSIONARY, DR. DUFF. - Among the passengers who recently left Calcutta was the respected Scotch missionary Dr. Duff. In 1828 or 1829 the Church of Scotland resolved on sending a mission to India, and he was chosen as the first missionary. Dr. Duff was then, we believe, only about twenty-three years of age. After a most disastrous voyage, the ship in which he and Mrs. Duff sailed having become a total wreck, and that into which, after long waiting at the Cape, they were transferred, having run aground at the Sand-heads, he reached Calcutta in 1830. He opened a small school, which gradually enlarged, until it became what is now the largest educational establishment in India. A course of lectures that he delivered on the evidences and doctrines of Christianity contributed more, perhaps, than any other single cause, to break up the apathy and indifference of the natives, and to set mind to work amongst them. The press also was an engine of which he knew how to wield the power. 1834 he returned to Scotland for the benefit of his health. After residing for about five years at home, he again returned to India. He has again left to visit home, but promises to once more re-visit the country of his adoption with divine permission.

The Delhi Gazette informs us, that it is reported that Capt. Wakefield, of the 17th regt. N.I., has been selected by the Governor-General, on account of his intimate acquaintance with the Oriental languages and the habits and manners of the natives, to escort the Maharaj Duleep Singh to his mother at Benares. Few officers could have been selected from the ranks of the army better qualified by their eminent ability as Orientalists for this delicate duty. Capt. Wakefield is one of the very few men whose singular talents have not met with that encouragement which it is the boast of our Indian Government above all others, to bestow on those members of their service who are distinguished by their merits.

TAMPERING WITH THE ARMY AND NAVY. - The Calcutta Gazette contains the draft of a new Act to punish tampering with the army and navy. The magistrate is enabled by its provisions to act independently in all such cases, and to inflict a penalty of fourteen years' transportation, or a long imprisonment.

— A Calcutta quarterly reviewer designates the natives of India generally as "the dusky millions." But he is of opinion that the class of which he treats is fast degenerating, and that the cause is to be found in the growing apathy and indolence of its members. The remedy, as indicated by him, is in the study of the vernacular languages, and the British Indian regulations, during the leisure hours enjoyed by the youth who are employed in government offices. The reviewer seems to think, that the present preponderance of the Hindoos in the various offices of Government is a result to be ascribed solely to the neglect of the East Indians, who have not cared to improve their previous Mental improvement was at one time their pecusuperiority. liar characteristic.

CHANGE IN THE ABSENTEE RULES OF THE CIVIL SER-VICE .- A correspondent in the upper provinces says,-" A question of some difficulty and importance has arisen regarding the construction to be put upon the 11th section of the Absentee Rules for the civil service. By the rule, as amended on the 6th February, 1848, under instructions from the Court of Directors, the Government of each Presidency is 'empowered to grant to civil or to military officers holding civil appointments, leave of absence for one month in each year without deduction from the salaries or emoluments drawn by the officer. Such leave will, however, be only granted when the Government is satisfied that no inconvenience will arise from the departure of the officer seeking it. So the rule originally stood, but last year a sentence was embodied on it by orders of the Court of Directors, which enables the Government, when it sees the necessity of employing a substitute, to order the expenses incurred to be defrayed by the absentee. far all is sufficiently clear. But in a recent case the duties of the absent party had to be performed by a substitute, whose duties in like manner had to be discharged by a substitute, and so on, extra expense being incurred in four different offices. Now the question is, shall the absentee be called on to pay the expense incurred by the first substitution, only, or that on the expense incurred by the first substitution, only, or that on the expense of the temporary changes consequent thereon? The latter has been the course adopted recently in one instance, and, at the request of the absentee so charged, a reference has been made to the Supreme Government."

COLONEL GWATKIN'S NORTH-WEST BANK PLAN.-Colonel Gwatkin, being only a young banker, though an old soldier, has printed a letter addressed to the general meeting of shareholders of the North West Bank, in which he proposes to apply the reserved fund, now amounting to Company's Rs. 229,740, to the purchase of the shares of the institution, and to continue the process till at least one thousand shares have been obtained. this ingenious method, he expects to keep up the value of the stock in the market; and he remarks, that there are two classes who may be disposed to oppose his views, one a party who will not take the trouble to investigate, the other, parties who, satisfied of the safety of Mofussil banks, and desirous to invest, wish to see stock fall.

MR. J. A. F. HAWKINS .- Among the passengers, says the Friend of India, whom the last steamer conveys to their native land, is Mr. Hawkins, of the Bengal Civil Service, who retires from the public service, and from the country, after a residence of twenty-seven years. Mr. Hawkins appears to have landed in India in June 1822, and we find him only ten years after civil and sessions judge of Purch In the beginning of 1827 he was appointed Pagister of the neah. In the beginning of 1837 he was appointed Register of the Sudder Court in Calcutta, and continued to occupy this important and responsible post for more than ten years, till May 1837, when he was placed on the bench. We believe we only echo the general voice of the service, as well as of the members of government, when we state that Mr. Hawkins was regarded as one of the greatest ornaments of that court, and that no individual was considered more likely than he was, from his long legal experience, his sound and impartial judgment, his perfect command of temper, and the decision of his character, to raise the reputation of that Court in the estimation of the public. His departure is indeed a loss to the cause of justice. But Mr. Hawkins has other claims on our respect. He was among the most active and zealous friends of Christian truth in this country. The hours of leisure were unremittingly consecrated to the cause of public benevolence. The personal labour he bestowed on the revision of translations of the Sacred Scriptures, and of Christian tracts, is such as few men, not immediately engaged as Missionaries, have submitted to. His pecuniary liberality to the cause which engaged his affectionate sympathies was almost without limit.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

ARMY OF THE PUNJAB.

Head-Quarters, Camp. Wuzeerabad, March 24, 1849. - The Sth and 6th regiments of light cavalry are transferred from the 1st and 3rd to the 2nd brigade of cavalry of the army of the Punjab. The 2nd brigade of cavalry is broken up, and all ap-pointments connected with it will cease from this date.

The 3rd division of infantry of the army of the Punjab is broken up, and all appointments connected with it, and with the brigades composing it, will cease from the 26th instant.

HYPOTHECATION OF GOODS.

Fort William, Financial Department, March 31, 1849.-Notice is hereby given, that, in pursuance of instructions received from the Hon. Court of Directors, supplies on account of the home treasury will continue to be raised during the ensuing official year, 1849 50, on the security of goods to be hypothecated to the East-India Company, and that, so far as is at present known, the sum required to be provided in India by the purchase of bills will be 900,000/., liable, however, to such modification or extension as may hereafter be demanded by the exigencies of the public

Advances of cash will accordingly be made, for this purpose, by the Governments of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, to the extent of three-fourths of the value of the goods hypothecated, and the bills in repayment of these advances are to be drawn at six months' sight, at the rate of ls. 10d. per Company's rupee, until further notice.

It is also further notified, that in pursuance of instructions received from the Hon. the Court of Directors, the Governments of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, have been authorized, in any case in which they may consider such a course to be expedient, to dispense with the obligation to insure, which is imposed by the existing terms and conditions upon parties who may obtain advances from the respective governments, on the security of goods hypothecated to the East India Company, intimating to them that the Hon. Court will make the insurance in England, and requiring a declaration binding the parties to repay the premium upon insurances which the Court may effect before the bills of lading and other shipping documents are handed over to their agents.

It is to be understood that the insurance to be effected will only be to the amount of the advance in each case, so as to cover the East-India Company's risk.

In all other respects the existing terms and conditions of the advances, to be made by the respective governments will remain in force, and be the same as published in the Calcutta Gazette under date the 1st April, 1842.

GENERAL REMARKS

The Bombay Express came in on the 14th instant, bringing London dates to 9th March.

The Home advices by the two last mails confirm the prospect of improvement in European commerce. They give confidence to shippers, and markets are steadily, though gradually, rising here. Produce is not abundant, and of some staples supplies are very scant.

There have been a few small auctions, and one largish re-sale of Indigo, the last at an advance of Rs. 20 on January rates—34,672 chests, or 127,800 mds. have now gone, of which 25,889 are to England, and 6,138 to France. Sugar sells steadily as it comes in; all kinds at rather high rates since the arrival of last mail.

Silk remains dull, but as stocks do not press, pending the incom-Silk remains dull, but as stocks do not press, pending the incoming of the new Bund, prices have not yet gone lower. Corahs are large in stock, and were dull, but large sales have just been made. Saltpetre is in steady inquiry, mostly for America. Rice is little wanted for homeward shipment. Shell Lac and Lack Dye are freely shipped without change in value. Jute continues in good request, and most of the minor staples are selling well and freely.

The Opium market has at last taken a downward course. Prices and will be readed for Br. 160 the history for Brites for the second will be seen to be seen the second will be seen the second will be seen to be gradually receded from Rs. 1,160, the highest rate for Pataa a fort gradually receded from Rs. I,160, the highest rate for Patna a fortnight since, to Rs. 1052-5-6, the average of the sale on the 16th instant. It is now down to Rs. 1,030 and has been lower.

The import market remains in an improved position. The internal trade is in all respects healthy, and money unusually cheap in the Bazar. The stocks of British goods had again fallen low, but later arrivals have brought in a considerable supply.

There has been more business in the up-country trade during the last week, which may fairly be ascribed to the settlement of the Punjab. It is not alone from the new British Province that we may look for an extension of business. Should our Government settle the frontier duties on a wise and liberal basis—the yearly increasing demand for Cahal and Central Asia will undountedly be creasing demand for Cabul and Central Asia will undoubtedly be greatly extended.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A DETACHMENT of the 21st regiment arrived from the Straits in the Hon. Company's steamer Hugh Lindsay, on Sunday, April 15, and were disembarked on the following evening, and encamped on the Esplanade on the north beach.

Wz regret much to record the death of the Rev. Joseph Roberts, superintendent of the Wesleyan Mission in Madras, which took place on Saturday last. We are indebted for the following brief particulars to the kindness of a correspondent.—Mr. Roberts entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1818, and in that year received his appointment to Jaffna, in Ceylon. He subsequently laboured in Batticalo and Trincomallee, and after a residence of fourteen years in Ceylon returned to England; where he was stationed, successively at Canterbury, Bristol, Sheffield, and Macclesfield. In 1842, Mr. Roberts returned to India, and from that time until his death resided in Madras. His concern for the prosperity of the mission, with the oversight of which he was intrusted, will be long testified by the results of his activity and zeal. His death occurred on the 14th instant, at Palaveram, whither he had gone the preceding afternoon. His decease was delightfully tranquil; and with a smile upon his countenance, without a sigh or groan, he breathed his last. His funeral was largely attended, and the procession numbered persons of all classes, from the highest officers to the humblest natives of the presidency.—Athenœum, April 17.

A New Retiring Fund.—A local correspondent observes, with reference to proposals for a new Retiring Fund, "A few years ago the Madras army were in possession of a Retiring Fund, which, although perhaps of too extended a nature to last long, was nevertheless of incalculable benefit during its existence. Since its demise several fresh plans and schemes have from time to time been advanced, but all to no purpose! In this objection may be included one now in progress. Taking its rise at Octacamund, it is doing its best to pursue its course through the army, a very doubtful journey. It is little better than a year ago when a lieut-colonel high up in the list offered to retire for Rs. 10,000. A circumstance po sooner known than seven others were to be found. cumstance no sooner known than seven others were to be found willing and ready to follow his example! Scarcely credible is it, but no less a melanchely truth, that this sum could not be raised in the whole army! several regiments, when applied to, never even taking the trouble of answering the letter! Most men, we imagine, with such facts as the foregoing before their eyes, would give the matter up as hopeless; but, no; our friends on the hills think differently, and propose 'that the majors alone shall do' what the whole army have been unable to accomplish, and not only pay the ten thousand rupees themselves, but signify their intention of retiring a few weeks after their promotion.

THE ELPHINSTONE COLLEGE PROFESSORS .- A very strong application has been made by the Education Board, to have the professors of the Elphinstone College placed on the same footing as chaplains and assistant-chaplains; that is, to have a definite period of service, life annuities on retirement, and the privileges of furlough and sick leave.

MADRAS UNIVERSITY.—The annual distribution of prizes to the students of the High School took place on the 16th April, in the presence of the Governor and a large number of European ladies and gentlemen, including Mesdames Norton, Rumley, Worster, Hope, Biden, and Miss Biden; the Commander-in-Chief, Hon. D. Elliot, Sir V. Stonhouse, Col. Armstrong, Rev. Dr. Duff, Dr. Mowatt, Dr. Wylie, &c. The Advocate-General and the President of the University delivered an address, which was followed by the reading of the annual report; the boys read their several essays, and received with others their various honorary degrees and rewards. When the task of distribution was ended, Sir Henry Pottinger addressed the meeting. His Excellency said that with regard to the University—after having given its affairs the fullest consideration, and with all the advantages of having studied their former reports, he felt bound to say that it had not produced the good which might have been fairly expected from it. Government had a right to complain that their efforts had not been fairly seconded. There was another important subject to which he wished to advert. Highly gratified as he was with the character of the attainments exhibited by the proficients, it had yet struck him with infinite surprise that hitherto it had been found impossible to get schoolmasters from amongst them; and to suppose that Government could continue to obtain tutors from England, Calcutta, or Bombay, was out of the question. However highly qualified such men might be in other respects, it was evident that they lacked the local knowledge which might enable them to conduct schools in the interior.

FIGHT WITH A TIGER.—The Madras Circulator has the following paragraph:—" A few days ago (near Samulcottah) a villager being attacked by a tiger, and having only a spear, on the approach of the tiger, made a stand, and, when he came within spear's length, gave him a thrust, which only scraped him slightly. Seeing that the thrust had not its desired effect, he threw the spear into his left hand, the tiger immediately made a rush on him, with his mouth open. The man gave the tiger his right hand, and with the left gave him a second thrust, which must have touched his heart; for, no sooner did he receive the thrust, than he stood panic-struck, fainted, and died. I have seen the skin myself, the tail. The man is now in hospital, whose wound is getting better."

FREE TRADE. - The Athenæum says, that the intended removal of all restrictions upon the free carriage of merchandise, to and from British ports, must prove of incalculable benefit to Madras, which neither owns nor builds ships except for the purposes of the country trade, and must therefore reap advantage from any measure calculated to improve the carrying trade between India and the rest of the world.

THE PIPING TIMES OF PEACE.—With the close of the war a lengthy exordium on the vice of smoking has lately been delivered by a lieut.-colonel of Madras cavalry, which a local paper remarks, painfully reminds us of a piping time of peace."

INFRINGEMENT OF COPYRIGHT. - The Athenaum has an article charging the Christian Knowledge Society with reprinting copyright works, such as Carpenter's Spelling-book and Marshman's Survey of History, and embarking in such speculations to the prejudice of the interests of the trade. Mr. R. Twigg, the Society's secretary, however, denies the impeachment, though not to the extent of entirely disproving the assertions put forth.

REGIMENTAL MOVEMENT.—The head-quarter detachment of the 51st Madras regiment deposited their arms in the arsenal (April 17) for packing, preparatory to their embarkation for the Straits in the steamer Hugh Lindsay.

Mr. M. S. Durr has written and just published a poem, in the epic form, entitled "The Captive Ladye," which the press assumes to possess no ordinary poetic talent, and it has been largely quoted from.

THE BALL to be given to Sir Henry Pottinger by the ladies of this presidency took place on Thursday night last, and we are only fulfilling the confident anticipation of every person regarding it, when we say that it proved a most brilliant and delightful affair. Considering, indeed, those by whom it was designed and arranged, the result could not have been otherwise than satisfactory, both to the honoured guest of the evening, and to the parties who partook of the festivities in general. The platform or dais at the upper end of the banqueting-room, was converted into a supper apartment, by means of an elegantly adorned temporary partition, and afforded every convenience for that purpose. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and suite were present to meet Sir Henry Pottinger, together with nearly all the military and civil staff at the presidency, and a large number of the non-official members of the society of Madras. It is almost unnecessary to add, that the refreshments were on a scale of abundance only surpassed by the tastefulness of the manner in which they were made to adorn the tables. The wines, likewise, were of an excellent quality, and the ices, &c. inexhaustible. Dancing commenced at 10 o'clock, and was kept up with spirit until some time after the Governor had retired .- Spectator, April 16.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

ensign james richard fulton, 2nd eur. L.I. Head-Quarters, Choultry Plain, March 3, 1849.—The following are extracts from the confirmed proceedings of an European general court-martial, holden at Trichinopoly, Feb. 10, 1849.

Ens. J. R. Fulton, 2nd Eur. L.I., placed in arrest by order of Maj. F. W. Hands, commanding the same regt., upon the following charges:

First Charge. - For conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having, at Trichinopoly, on the night of the 8th or morning of the 9th of January, 1849, been drunk he being at the time on the sick report.

Second Charge. - For disgraceful conduct, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in the following instances

First Instance. —In having at the time and place set forth in the first charge, while in a disgraceful state of intoxication, forcibly entered the bed-room of Lieut. E. Presgrave, 2nd Eur. L.I., after that officer had retired to rest, and then and there subjected himself to be violently ejected by that officer from the said bed-room.

Second Instance. - In having at Trichinopoly, on the morning of Jan. 9, 1849, submitted to be violently expelled from the house occupied by the aforesaid Lieut. E. Presgrave, by that officer, without resorting to any measures for obtaining redress, by bringing the same to the notice of wal. r. W. Hands, his commanding outer, or by any other authorized means.

Finding on the First Charge.—Guilty, with the exception of the date, which should be the night of Jan. 7.

Revised Finding on the First Instance of the Second Charge.—
Guilty, with the following exceptions:—the date, which the Court find should be on the night of Jan. 7; and the Court is further of opinion that the facts proved are not liable to the imputation escribed to them in this Charge, namely, "Disgraceful conduct;" but it considers such conduct to have been "violent and highly unbecoming."

Revised Finding on the Second Instance of the Second Charge .-

Not Guilty. Revised Sentence - To be suspended from rank, pay and allowances, for a period of two lunar months.

Approved and Confirmed.

(Signed) G. H. F. Berkeley, Lieut-gen., Commander-in-Chief. The period of suspension awarded Ensign James Richard Fulton is to commence from the date of the promulgation of this order at Trichinopoly, which is to be reported to the adjt .gen. of the army.

LIEUT. EDWARD BAYLY, IST FUSILIERS.

Head Quarters, Choultry Plain, March 14, 1849. - Extracts from the proceedings of an European General Court Martial, holden at Bellary, on February 23, by order of Brig. Gen. S.W. Steel, C.B., commanding the troops serving in the Ceded Districts.

Lieut. E. Bayly, placed in arrest by order of Lieut. Col. T. A.

Duke, commanding same regiment, on the following charges:—
First Charge.—For conduct highly unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having at Bellary, on January 28, 1849, had in his house, and sat in Company with, for the space of two hours or thereabouts, a private, H. Worsted, of No. 8 Co. let Madras Fusiliars, during which time they dearly handy and lst Madras Fusiliers, during which time they drank brandy and smoked cigars together, until the said Private H. Worsted was intoxicated; he, Lieut. E. Bayly, being at the time on duty as regimental officer of the day, and the said Private II. Worsted on regimental duty as his orderly.

Second Charge. - For highly unofficerlike conduct, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having, at the same place, and on the same day as stated in the first charge, been drunk on duty as regimental officer of the day

Finding on the First Charge. - Not guilty, and the Court acquits him thereof.

The Second Charge. - Guilty of the second charge.

Sentence. - To lose six steps in his regiment, by being placed in the list of lieutenants in the said regiment next below Lieut. John Paske.

Remarks by the Commander-in-Chief .- The Court seems to me to have drawn rather a fine line of distinction in their sentence. Lieut. Bayly is found guilty of being "drunk on duty," and I presume it has not visited him with "cashiering" under an idea that it was not "under arms" that he was drunk. Lieut. Bayly was orderly officer of the day, and as such mounted with the regimental guards, of which he had the general superintendence. He was on no account to quit the lines of his regiment, and must invariably appear completely dressed and accoutred. To me, the importance of the duty appears tantamount to a duty under arms; and drunkenness, under such circumstances, should have been visited with dismissal from the service. However, as the Court has adjudged a loss of rank, I will not call for a revision, in the hope that the punishment now awarded will have the effect of causing Lieut. Bayly seriously to reflect upon the consequences brought upon him by his intemperate habits, and the very narrow escape he has had, to use the words of his own defence, of not having been "driven forth into the wide world without a friend, a hopeless, helpless man." Such, however, will most assuredly be the case, unless Lieut. Bayly chooses to profit by what I must consider a lenient sentence for almost the most serious crime an officer can be guilty of.

(Signed) G. H. F. BERKELEY, Lieut. Gen.

Madras, March 13, 1849. Commander-in-Chief.

The name of Lieut. E. Bayly is hereafter to be inserted next below Lieut. J. Paske, of the 1st Madras Fusiliers. He is to be released from arrest, and directed to return to his duty.

VETERINARY SURGEON THOMAS PHILLIPS 5TH LT. CAV.

Head-Quarters, Choultry Plain, March 22, 1849.—General
Court-Martial, holden at Jaulnah, on Tuesday, March 6, 1849, by order of Brigadier John Polglase James, commanding the Hyderabad subsidiary force. Vet. Surg. T. Phillips, 5th L. C., placed in close arrest by order of Lieut. Col. Francis Straton, commanding 5th Light Cavalry, on the following charge.

Charge. - For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having at Jaulnah, on the evening of December 25, 1848, appeared on the public road and in the vicinity of the house occupied by Surg. G. E. Edgeome, of the 5th Light Cavalry, in a state of intoxication producing mental delirium, brandishing a carving knife accompanied with threats and gestures calculated to create plant and to cause injury to accompanies. tures calculated to create alarm and to cause injury to some one.

The above being in breach of the Articles of War.

Finding.—" Guilty," with the exception of the words "brandishing" and "threats."

Sentence.—To be dismissed the service.

Recommendation.—The Court having performed its painful duty in awarding a sentence commensurate with the offence of which the prisoner has been convicted, and taking into consideration the long period during which he has been in close arrest, and the high testimony borne to his character for zeal and attention to his duty, as recorded upon the proceedings, respectfully begs leave to recommend the prisoner to the merciful consideration of H. E. the Commander-in-Chief.

Remarks.—I have attentively read over the proceedings of the General Court-Martial upon Vet. Surg. T. Phillips, 5th L. C., and much as I should wish to attend to the recommendation of the members of the Court, yet I consider that I cannot do so with a just regard to the interests of the service, or indeed with safety to the regiment. The prisoner appears to have drunk himself into a state of insanity, rendering him perfectly unconscious of his acts whilst in that state, and it would appear from below of the sets whilst in that state, and it would appear from the evidence adduced, that the infirmity alluded to by the prisoner, and pleaded in extenuation, has been greatly aggravated by his intemperate habits. I have only power in this instance to confirm or remit entirely the sentence, and under the present circumstances, as I should not feel justified in doing the latter, no alternative remains but to confirm the sentence; which I further feel compelled to do, from the reports that have been made of the habitual intemperance of Vet. Surg. Phillips, which seems to disqualify him for the duties he has to perform; or, at least, to make it impossible that any reliance can be placed on his professional practice on any sudden emergency.

(Signed) G. H. F. Berkeley,

Veterinary Surgeon Thomas Phillips is to be struck off the strength of the army from the date of the publication of this order at Jaulnah, which is to be reported to the adjutant-gene-

BOMBAY. YOUNG HOLKAR.

Amidst the idleness, indolence, sensuality, ignorance, and want of principle to be met with in courts and palaces throughout India, it is gratifying to find a native prince, fast hastening to that period of life when the destinies of his people will be committed to his hands, trained up in a way befitting his station and its duties and responsibilities. The celebration of the Dusserah is an occasion which permits of a freer intercourse betwixt a young sovereign and his subjects, and a fuller and more frank expression of feeling and sentiment, than at any other period. At Indore, the festival was this season celebrated with more than ordinary pomp, and gave rise to exhibitions of affection and respect from the people to their chief in the highest degree gratifying. In 1844, young Holkar was placed under the charge of Oomed Singh, the most fitting teacher that could be selected for him; and the rapidity of the progress made by him did equal credit to the pupil and to the teacher. He can now read and write his own language with the most perfect fluency; he is a good mathematician, an accurate arithmetician, and fair accountant. He reads and speaks English with tolerable ease, and comprehends it perfectly when spoken in his hearing. He has studied geography with care, and has a much more extensive acquaint-ance with English history than is possessed by many European gentlemen of his age. The greatest care has been taken to fami-liarize young Holkar with practical business—to teach him to take a share and feel an interest in affairs of state. While thus taught that study and business are a pleasure as well as a duty to well-constituted minds, the Maharajah is trained in those manly sports and athletic exercises conducive to bodily health and wholesome excitement, and which in ancient times were regarded as indispensable points of education. The great object of the resident, who has bestowed so much attention on these affairs, and laboured so indefatigably for the advancement of his royal charge, has been to reverse as much as possible the Oriental system, by which a prince on arriving at the years of maturity finds himself oppressed with indolence or lost in self-indulgence and dissipation, and surrendering himself absolutely to those whose object all along has been to acquire power for themselves by reducing him to whom it ought rightfully to belong to a state in which he is incapable of exercising it. In all these things the Malisabibebee has most cordially lent her aid; her sole delight has been in the training of her son, and she has foregone luxuries, and abandoned the intended indulgence of a pilgrimage, when made aware that the expense proposed to be incurred would too severely press on the resources of the State. - Bombay Times, April 4.

COTTON CLEANING IN INDIA.

THERE has been of late a great deal said, and with considerable declamation, at home on the productive resources of India. Major-General Briggs, who spent upwards of thirty years in different parts of this country, remarks, in his evidence before the Cotton Committee of the House of Commons last year:-" I have no doubt that India could produce sufficient cotton for the consumption of the whole world. The two great obstacles are the land tax, and the want of roads for conveyance." Now we are inclined to concur in the opinion of the General; and particularly as we find that Dr. Royle, Dr. Wight, Dr. Burn, and Dr. Lush, together with a host of others, who have been called in to prescribe, as it were, for the decline of our cotton trade, are of much the same way of thinking. The richness of the soil, and the industry of the cultivating portions of the inhabitants, are known to be very great, and hopes of improvement, based upon these, have from time to time been held out. Still nothing has been done worth talking of, and till we can see encouragement and enterprise of the proper sort, and from the proper quarter, brought to bear practically, and in a well-organized shape, on the culture and increase of the exportable raw produce of the country, we cannot reasonably look for any real or permanent change for the better. The experiments, as they are called, for the cultivation of American cotton, afford an example in point. Here time, and hope, and money, have all been frittered away. During nine long years the latest series of trials has been going on; and with what other apparent result than a bootless expenditure of the public money (in this country at least) no one can tell. At home, it might be supposed, from their continuance, that the experiments serve some useful purpose; but of this we must confess ourselves profoundly ignorant. The ponderous Blue Book Report of the Cotton Committee of the House of Commons, which we lately received, has done little more than prove to us the peculiar applicability, to the inquiry to which it relates, of the Scotch proverb wherewith a certain old gentleman is said to have apostrophized his pig, when disappointed in the obtainment of a supply of wool from its back!

So little appears to be known in England of the details of our principal and most important article of trade, that we have thought it might interest our readers were we occasionally to give short descriptive accounts of some of the more important features, at least in so far as our limited means admit of.

Cotton, when gathered from the bush, requires to be separated from the seeds to which it adheres. The natives of Western India have two ways of effecting this. In the Mahratta country, and to the southward of Bombay, the foot-roller is in general use.

In the north, throughout Guzerat, the churka is everywhere employed.

The foot-roller consists of a small bit of iron rod, a little thicker in the middle than at the extremities, to which it gradually tapers. It is turned round by the feet, defended by wooden soles, upon a smooth hard stone of twelve inches or more square, and on which is placed a thin layer of the seeded cotton. Women generally perform this work, sitting upon a stool in the open air. It is necessary that the kuppas or seeded cotton be freely exposed. in the sun at the time of working, that the seeds may be rendered sufficiently hard and dry to prevent crushing, which otherwise would ensue from the pressure of the roller. The seed all passes in front, and the cotton comes out in a continuous web behind. About six pounds of clean wool is the produce of a fair day's work.

The churka is not so simple. On the contrary, it is a very ingenious machine, and consists of two cylinders revolving close together, in different directions, and which are made just sufficiently rough to catch hold of the delicate fibres of the cotton, and drag them through, thus breaking off and leaving the seeds behind, and which drop to the ground. Of the two cylinders, the upper one is made of iron, generally twelve inches in length between the bearings, and three quarters of an inch in diameter at the centre, tapering to five-eighths at the extremities. This roller is made to revolve at great speed by means of the fly-wheel and the long handle, which is attached to the small stool on which the person driving it is seated. The lower roller is of the hardest wood—that of the Acacia Arabica tree suits best, from its peculiar grain, and is always used. It is made quite cylindrical in the common native turning-lathe, and as it wears gradually from use, it is found from two and a quarter to one and three quarters of an inch in diameter. It is moved slowly round by the person sitting on the ground, and who grasps the handle with the right hand, at the same time using the left hand to supply the seeded cotton to the revolving rollers. From twenty to forty pounds of clean wool can in this way be produced daily by two individuals.

For the purpose of obtaining the largest amount of work, in the most efficient manner, the cotton-dealers put up sheds, commonly in the form of hollow squares, called hars, under which the people fix their churkes in rows, sitting there during the day, and returning to their huts at night. The cotton, as it passes through the churka, is collected into heaps, and unless retained for the purpose of adulteration, is packed at once into bales, by means of wooden screw presses, which can be put up temporarily wherever a har is at work. These bales are then ready for transport or shipment to Bombay, and contain nearly 400 lbs. each.

It is generally the indigent and worst off among the population who devote their time to the churka. But as the work can be most advantageously completed during the season from February to May, when the crop is gathering, there is then great exertion made by all classes. A very large number of poor people depend on making a livelihood by this description of work. The machine is so easily managed, and so little exertion is requisite, that children may often be seen "lending a hand" to help their parents. Even the old people of the villages, the lame and the blind, all totter out to inquire how the work gets on. And it is a fact of much interest, that numbers of blind people make themselves useful by sitting and turning the churka-wheel, which they do perfectly well, and are thus able to repay to kind relatives a considerable portion of the expense incurred in their support.

What may be the actual number of people occupied in cottoncleaning in Guzerat, it is impossible to tell; but there is a simple calculation which will enable us to form a tolerably close approximation thereto. If 60,000 bales, each of 400 pounds, be the annual export, then at 25 pounds per diem by each churka, during four months, from 8,000 to 10,000 would be required, and this would bring 20,000 people into active occupation during the working season. In point of efficiency, we do not think that any machine can be found to compete with the churka. Its use is familiar to the people; it can be easily repaired when out of order; and its cost is only two rupees. Can it be a matter of surprise to any one that all the attempts to introduce hand gins into Guzerat should have failed? Our surprise is, that they should ever have been persevered in. The causes of failure are patent to the whole world .- Telegraph and Courier.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Mail, with letters from London to March 24, reached

Bombay by the Mozuffer on the 26th of April.

MAILS FROM SYDNEY .- The papers state that her Majesty's Government have contracted with the Australian Company to take the mails from Sydney to Singapore for 26,000% a year. That company, moreover, expect another sum of 8,000/. per annum from the Dutch Government, for the conveyance of the mail to Batavia. This will open a much more rapid means of communication with Sydney and Australia in general, as the voyage will be reduced nearly one-third.

THE BISHOPRIC.—There is a rumour that our much respected bishop proposes retiring to Europe-an event which would prove a subject of deep regret to the community .- Bombay Times.

SIR WILLOUGHBY COTTON. - The resignation of Sir Willoughby Cotton is known; he only remains now to be relieved. His retirement was the subject of general and deep regret.

COLONEL OUTRAM, who proceeded by steamer to Aden, on his way, as was supposed, to India, has returned to Egypt, where he will remain throughout his period of leave.

MAHABULESHWAR. — A severe thunderstorm occurred at Malcolm Peth on the evening of Tuesday, the 17th of April. There was a somewhat heavy fall of rain, and the post-office was struck with lightning and burnt down.

ARNOTT'S WATER-BED. - A few months since one of Arnott's water-beds was sent out for the medical stores without any definite purpose, but in hopes that it might be useful. The wounded from Mooltan arrived shortly after, and one of the officers was so weak, attenuated, and sore every way, and so perfectly bedridden, that it was impossible to turn him: he had no energy, could get no rest, and was sinking rapidly from sheer weariness, and the water-bed was tried with him. Here he felt as if afloat,-he was supported at every point; the moveable couch hurt him no more; sleep returned, and strength quickly followed it; and he is now amongst the number of convalescents, -his life, like that of many others, having been saved by Dr. Arnott's admirable contrivance. It may be mentioned, as an apparent, though not a real, anomaly, that the chief inconvenience suffered from the water-bed arises from its heat: water, though an excellent carrier, is a bad conductor of heat, and the upper film, once heated, remains so.—Bombay Times.

SERJEANT MURRAY. - Amongst the men wounded at Mooltan belonging to the 1st Fusiliers, is Serjeant Murray. When volunteers to join the Fusiliers were called for from the 2nd European L. I., at Poona, Murray was employed as orderly-room clerk. He volunteered, amongst others, but being "a useful man" in the corps, permission to leave it was for some time refused him. He ultimately gained his object, and joined the Fusiliers, and with them proceeded to Mooltan. Murray formed one of the storming party on the 2nd January. On ascending the breach, he was severely wounded by a sword cut, one of the fingers of the left hand having been cut off. He immediately shot his opponent. He was now a second time wounded in the same hand, a ball having passed through it. Making for the Sikh by whose matchlock he had suffered, he bayonetted him; when he was attacked by a chief, sword in haud. The man into whom he had run his bayonet held it so firmly in his grasp, that he found it impossible to withdraw it. The chief was on him, and in the act of cutting him down, when Murray dropped his musket, and sprang on his new antagonist. Seizing him by the throat, he pummelled him with his fists, and managed to wrench the sword from his hand, and with it succeeded in cutting him down. The tulwar is an exceedingly fine one, with a silver handle, and is now in Murray's possession-a memorial of his valour. -Bombay Times, March 21.

The venerable the Archdeacon has obtained leave to return to Europe on furlough for twenty months. Once in England, we should doubt, says the Bombay Times, if he would feel any great desire to return to the East. He leaves with the hearty good will of a large circle of friends and admirers.

MORTALITY OF THE BOMBAY ARMY .- A table of very great interest has been published, of the amount of casualties, and nature of the diseases causing death, in the Bombay army, for the The difference of salubrity in different districts, last eight years. as well as in different years, is remarkable. The deaths, which during the past eight years have averaged close on six per cent. throughout the presidency, amounted in 1848, the healthiest year by much within the term under review, to little more than two and a half per cent.; while, in 1842, it was close on nine, and in 1844 exceeded seven and a quarter. Again, taking difference of space instead of time, we find the same diversities. At Kirkee, which seems the most healthy in the presidency, the mortality has been under three per cent.; while at Deesa, Belgaum, and Poonah, it has been under three and three quarters. The recent salubrity of Scinde has made up for its former unhealthiness, and though on the eight years it gives us the very high average of twelve per cent. it falls short of the presidency, where it is close on twelve and a half. In Scinde, during the years 1844, 1845, and 1846, the mortality was no less than eighteen, nineteen, and sixeeen per cent.; in 1847 it sunk at once to 1.94, and in 1848 is no more than 2.54. On an examination of the returns for Bombay we find a per-centage of nineteen for the year 1842, when malignant fever got amongst the European troops, and H. M. 17th suffered so fearfully. The following year H. M. 86th and 28th suffered from cholera, and the mortality is eighteen per cent.; but the mortality for 1844 continues as high as fifteen. The two past years seem everywhere to have been distinguished for their salubrity, and our averages sunk accordingly to six and a half and five and a half per cent. The lowest average we find anywhere is that of Mhow for 1844, where we have only 1.06 per cent. of mortality; next to this is Kirkee for 1843 and 1847, where we have 1.62 and 1.26 respectively. During 1847 and 1848, Belgaum goes down to 1.47 and 1.36, and Ahmednuggur to 1.59 and 1.80 respectively.

VISIT TO THE "KOODA" CAVE TEMPLES .- A local correspondent gives the following account of his visit to these newly-discovered antiquities:—The "Kooda" Cave temples are situate near the east bank of the Rajpooree Khanee, distant about eight miles from its entrance. The entire distance from Bombay to these caves may be set down at fifty-four miles, from point to point. On rounding a spur of land, inside the khanee, called Danda, lying on the left, or northern side, make for a rock or islet, called "Joree," on reaching which, the caves may be distinctly seen through a glass, bearing N.E. half E. at an elevation of perhaps 150 feet. A small creek branches off from the khanee, bearing N.E. by N., which leads at once to the landing-place, and may be availed of, during high-water, by the ordinary bunderboat. These caves are not large, neither will they bear comparison in other respects with those at Elephanta. They are perfectly dry, clean, and free from disagreeable smells. The entrance of the principal excavation is adorned, on either side, by the head and forepart of an elephant, of about the natural size. The right-hand figure, however, has fallen to decay. This apartment is about 25 feet by 30, and 10 feet in height. It has a verandah in front, which bears a Mahratta inscription. At the rear is a smaller chamber, occupied by a ghoomut of considerable dimensions. On the left hand is a doorway, leading to a subterranean passage, which, according to my informant (the chief man of the village), is supposed to extend the whole way to Mhar. figures about these caves are not numerous, nor of any size; but all are in a state of preservation, and contrast, in this respect, remarkably with their dilapidated compeers at Elephanta. I believe I am the fourth European only that has hitherto visited these The centre room would afford comfortable accommodation to a limited party. There are two springs of excellent water flowing at your feet. The smaller rooms on either side might be appropriated as servants' apartments, cooking and bathing places, &c. The whole range of the caves immediately faces the west, so that the refreshing sca-breeze has the fullest ingress to them all.

MR. JOHN BELL, late Professor of the Elphinstone College, has we understand been requested by the directors of the Parsee Institution to return to Bombay to take charge of their seminaries. Mr. Bell's character as a private gentleman, and qualifications as a teacher, are well known in Bombay, and they are as highly appreciated as they are extensively known. His health is now completely restored, and his return amongst us will be hailed as a valuable accession to the educational mechanism of the presidency. The Parsees have we understand resolved to set the example in the liberality of the provision in justice due to our instructors, and which the Board of Education have so wisely re-commended to the Court of Directors.

THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTION had suffered the scandal of failure, but unjustly, in consequence of the removal of the readingroom from the Dockyard, in which Government had allowed the Society temporary accommodation. "Than the Commander-in-Chief of the Indian navy," observes the Bombay Times, "him-self an engineer of name and experience, no one can be more anxious to promote the interests of the establishment, where such can be done without the violation of a standing order. We mention this because an impression has gone abroad—and a most erroneous one it is-that the present unpalatable change arises from coldness to an establishment to which in reality the Commander-in-Chief feels most warmly."

PATENT FUEL. - Some experiments are being tried with patent fuel on board our steamers, promising to be of much value. The rapid deterioration from which coal suffers in India has long been felt as a very serious grievance: the evaporable oils and gases appear to be drawn out of it by the sun and air; and it is thought likely that the want may be compensated by the use of artificial fuel in which these prevail in excess. The subject is well worthy of investigation.

THE GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE.—The presentation of the Carnac, Farish, and Anderson scholarships, and other prizes, took place at the Grant Medical College, April 16. Amongst those present were The Hon. Sir Erskine Perry, Chief Justice, in the chair, supported by the Hon. J. P. Willoughby and D. A. Blane, members of Council, &c. &c. The President then called upon the Principal, Dr. Morehead, to read the report for the last year, from which it appeared that this is the first session in which, according to the established course of instruction, the senior students have been required to enter upon the study of the practical branches of medical education, and in which they have had to direct their minds to the application of the facts of anatomy, physiology, chemistry, and materia medica, to the cure and alleviation of disease. They have also had to attend courses of lectures on the principles and practice of medicine and surgery. The Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy Medical Book Fund of Rs. 10,000, and the Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy Medical Prize Fund of Rs. 5,000 have been added to the valuable endowments of this college, and will remain as an additional permanent record of a boundless philanthropy. Yet a further instance of encouragement of the medical studies in this place was communicated;—Venaik Gungadhur Shastree, a native gentleman, not only by historical association, but also as an enlightened student of physical and chemical science, has within the last few days offered the Institution a variety of new prizes.

COURT-MARTIAL.

LIEUT. ALEXANDER MILLER, H.M.'s 22ND FOOT. Head Quarters, Camp Kussoon, April 5, 1849. - At a general Court martial, holden at Colaba, on Wednesday, March 14, 1849, Lieut. A. Miller, H. M.'s 22nd foot, was arraigned on the following charges:-

For disgraceful and irregular conduct, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman in the following instances, viz.:—

First.—In having, in cantonment near Poona, between August I and September 30, 1848, while a member of the regiment Canteen fund committee, and having charge of the money, and superintendence of the accounts of the same, fraudulently and unauthorizedly instructed Pallungee Nasserwangee, the canteen writer, to make false entries in the said accounts to the amount of rupees one hundred (Rs. 100) or thereabouts, by adding certain sums, not incurred, to the actual loss on beer purchased for the use of the said canteen, thereby causing a loss to the funds of the same.

Second. - In having, at the same place, between October 1 and 10, 1848, in delivering over charge of the accounts, fraudulently retained the sum of rupees one hundred and ninety-two (Rs. 192) or thereabouts, due to the Canteen fund, after deducting the actual losses incurred in the sale of beer, during the months of August and September, 1848.

Additional Charge.—For disgraceful and irregular conduct, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman,

In having, at the place specified in the original charge, fraudulently entered in the day-book of the regimental canteen, as a disbursement to Messrs. Young and Co., Bombay, in the month of August, 1818, by vouchers 2, 3, and 4, the sum of Co.'s Rs. 2,088. 8 a.; whereas the amount of the said accounts amounted in the aggregate only to Rs. 1,988. 8 a., thereby causing a loss to the Canteen fund of Rs. 100.

Finding. - Guilty of the first instance of the first charge. Guilty of the second instance of the first charge. Guilty of the additional charge.

Confirmed.

Gough, General, C. in C. East Indies. (Signed) Head-Quarters, Camp Lullecanee, April 4, 1849.

Recommendation by the Court.—The Court most respectfully beg to recommend the prisoner, for his length of service, to the merciful consideration of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

Remarks by the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief. - The Commander-in-Chief regrets that he cannot attend to the recommendation of the Court-martial, made in behalf of Lieut. Miller; that officer having been convicted of the very serious charge preferred against him.

His Excellency Lieut .- Gen. Sir Willoughby Cotton, G.C.B., is requested to report to the military secretary to the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief, and to the acting Adjutant-General of her Majesty's forces in India, the date on which the sentence may be published to her Majesty's 22nd regiment, and to order that Lieut. Miller's name be struck off from the returns that day.

MONDAY AFTERNOON, 5 O'CLOCK, 30TH APRIL, 1849 - Our market for imports has undergone no change, but we are sorry to say the export market has become dull, in consequence of the unsay the export market has become dull, in consequence of the uncertain state of political affairs at Canton, and less favourable accounts from home for our chief staple causing shippers to hold back. The arrivals from Great Britain during the past fortnight are the Sophia Moffat, from London, and the Sir Thomas Graham and Flora Macdonald, from Liverpool, which arrived here, the former vessel on the 26th, and the two latter on the 27th instant.

COTTON PIECE GOODS.—Until within the last few days we have been without supplies; those which have arrived by the above-named vessels, of the descriptions noticed in our last, have been eagerly purchased by dealers at full prices, and we have no change to notice in any description of either Grey, Bleached, or indeed in any other kind of goods, except, perhaps, Cotton. For Coarse Domestics, heavy 40 inch, a good inquiry has existed. As the season for shipping to Arabia and Persia is over, and that for Scinde nearly so, the inquiry for Domestics has altogether ceased, and that for Long-cloths. and other goods for dveing purposes, will shortly follow: inquiry for Domestics has altogether ceased, and that for Long-cloths, and other goods for dycing purposes, will shortly follow: during the past few days, Longcloths have not been so much in demand, but notwithstanding the prices are maintained. For the lighter fabrics, the demand has been kept up to a comparatively late period, owing to a scarcity of them in the interior. Importers and bazaar dealers both continue quite bare of stocks.

OPIUM.—The last accounts from China of this drug being considered favourable, the price for the best Mundlasir has advanced.

LABUAN.

The advices from Labuan are of the 30th of March. The colony was perfectly healthy, but no new settlers had arrived, nor was there as yet much additional traffic with the natives. therto, road-making and ditching had been the chief occupations. The cargo of coal lately shipped to Singapore had been sold at the highest market rate, although the stock of English coal at that port was at the time heavy. From Sarawak, accounts had that port was at the time heavy. been received of rather large quantities of gold having been lately found in the interior. Since the departure of the Meander for Hong-Kong, the Sakarrau and Serebas dyaks had renewed their piratical cruizes with the greatest audacity, and it is believed they had killed not less than 400 people during the last two months. At the time of the withdrawal of the Meander, they were preparing their fleet of prahus, and might then have been put down with comparative ease, while now that they have gained strength and confidence the task will be a troublesome one. Sir James Brooke, however, intends attacking them in June.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

Captain A. Cunningham, Bengal Engineers, has laid before the Government of India an elaborate Essay, illustrated by plans, elevations, and drawings, on the Arian order of architecture, as exhibited in the temples of Kashmir. The Government have communicated this Essay to the Asiatic Society of Bengal, and it is published in the last number of the Society's Journal. He observes, in his Introduction, that the architectural remains of Kashmir, unlike the temples of India, exhibit undoubted traces of the influence of Grecian art; they are distinguished "by the graceful elegance of their outlines, by the massive boldness of their parts, and by the happy propriety of their decorations." Although they cannot vie with the monuments of Athens, they possess great beauty of their own.

"The characteristic features of the Kashmirian architecture are its lofty pyramidal roof, its trefoiled doorways covered by pyramidal pediments, and the great width of its intercolumniations. The Grecian pediment is very low, and its roof exceedingly flat; the Kashmirian pediment, on the contrary, is extremely lofty, and its roof high. The former is adapted for a sunny and almost rainless climate, while the latter is equally well suited to a rainy and snowy climate." He observes: "In the Kashmirian architecture, the great width of the interval between the columns (which is constant) is, perhaps, the most characteristic feature of the order. Indeed, I have a suspicion that this distinctive mark of the Kashmirian style was well known to the Greeks, for an intercolumniation of four diameters,—an interval seldom, if ever, used by themselves,—was called Araiostyle, a name which would appear to refer to the intercolumniation common amongst the Hindus, or Eastern Aryas, the Aprici of Herodotus. The vulgar etymology of Araiostyle, from Apaioc, 'rare,' seems extremely far-fetched, if not absurd; while the etymology of the 'Arian columnar interval' appears both natural and appropriate, as the intercolumniation followed by the Aryas of Kashmir was never less than four diameters. Now the interval between the Kashmirian pillars being always Araiostyle, I feel inclined to call the style of architecture used by the Aryas of Kashmir the 'Arian order.' This name it fully merits; for it is as much a distinct order of architecture as any one of the more celebrated classic orders. Like them it is subject to known rules, which confine the genius of its architects within certain limits.

Before entering upon the details of the order, Captain Cunningham describes the existing state and appearance of the principal buildings in Kashmir, all of which were measured by himself. "They are," he says, "entirely composed of a blue limestone, which is capable of taking the highest polish,—a property to which I mainly attribute the present beautiful state of preservation of most of the Kashmirian buildings. Not one of these temples has a name, excepting that of Marttand, which is called, in the corrupt Kashmirian pronunciation, matan; but they are all known by the general name of Pándavón-ki lari, or 'Pándushouses,'-a title to which they have no claim whatever, unless, authority upon such a subject. He says, 'Circa autem Biduspum Pandovorum regio,'—'the kingdom of the Pándus is upon the Betasta (or Behat);' that is, it corresponded with Kashmir. This passage would seem to prove that the Pándavas still inhabited Kashmir so late as the second century of our era. Granting the correctness of this point, there may be some truth in the universal attribution of the Kashmirian temples to the race of Pandus, for some of these buildings date as high as the end of the fifth century, and there are others that must undoubtedly be much more ancient, perhaps even as old as the beginning of the Christian era. One of them dates from 220 B. C.

Most of the Kashmirian temples are more or less injured, but more particularly those at Wantipur, which are mere heaps Speaking of these temples, Trebeck* says, 'It is scarcely possible to imagine that the state of ruin to which they have been reduced has been the work of time, or even of man, as their solidity is fully equal to that of the most massive monuments of Egypt; earthquakes must have been the chief agents in their overthrow.' I have quoted this passage to show the utter confusion that characterises the ruins of the Avantipura temples. In my opinion, their overthrow is too complete to have been the result of an earthquake, which would have simply prostrated the buildings in large masses. But the whole of the superstructure of these temples is now lying in one confused heap of stones, totally disjointed from one another. I believe, therefore, that I am fully justified in saying, from my own experience, that such a complete and disruptive overturn could only have been produced by gunpowder. It seems, also, that Trebeck and Moorcroft would most likely have attributed their destruction to the same agency, had they not believed that the use of gunpowder was unknown at that time; for, in speaking of a traditional attempt made by Shah Hamadan to destroy Marttand, they say, 'It is fortunate he was not acquainted with the use of gunpowder.' I admit that this destructive agent was most probably unheard of in Kashmir so early as the reign of Shah Mir, Shah of Hamadan; but the destruction of the Kashmirian temples is universally attributed, both by history and by tradition, to the bigotted Sikander, whose idol-breaking zeal procured him the title of But-shikan, or 'Ikonoklastes. was reigning at the period of Timur's invasion of India, with whom he exchanged friendly presents, and from whom I suppose that he may have received a present of the 'villainous saltpetre.'

Even if this be not admitted, I still adhere to my opinion, that the complete ruin of the Avantipura temples could only have been effected by gunpowder, and I would then ascribe their overthrow to the bigotted Aurangzeb. Ferishta* attributed to Sikander the demolition of all the Kashmirian temples save one, which was dedicated to Mahadéva, and which only escaped 'in consequence of its foundation being below the escaped in consequence of its ioundation teing below the surface of the neighbouring water.' In A.D. 1580-90, however, Abul Fazl+ mentions that some of the idolatrous temples were in 'perfect preservation;' and Ferishta himself describes many of those edifices as being in existence in his own time, or about A. D. 1600.‡ Besides, as several of them are still standing, although more or less injured, it is quite certain that Sikander could not have destroyed them all.

"But besides the ruthless hand of the destroyer, another agency, less immediate, but equally certain in its ultimate effects, must have been at work upon the large temples of Kashmir. The silent ravages of the destroyer who carries away pillars and stones for the erection of other edifices, have been going on for centuries. Pillars, from which the architraves have been thus removed, have been thrown down by earthquakes, ready to be set up again for the decoration of the first massid or tomb that might be erected in their neighbourhood. Thus every Maho-medan building in Kashmir is constructed either entirely or in part of the ruins of Hindu temples.

"From the description of these temples given by Ferishta, it is evident that some of them were much more perfect in his time than any of those are which now exist. He describes them correctly enough, as being situated within quadrangles, and resting upon raised terraces; but they had transferred the 'massive solid columns, each of a single stone,' from the peristyles to the temples themselves. The apartments within, he adds, are small, being in general only twelve feet square; and on the walls are sculptures of human figures,—some representing mirth, others grief. In the middle of one of the temples there is a throne, cut out from the solid rock, on which is a minaret with a dome.' The last was most probably a Buddhist tomple The last was most probably a Buddhist temple, with an interior chaitya. Unfortunately, no trace of this now exists, unless, indeed, the description may be taken as bearing a distant resemblance to the Buddhist cave-temple of Bhaumajo.

The great size of most of the blocks of limestone, and the enormous massiveness of others, which have been used in the construction of the Kashmirian temples, first led the people to ascribe their foundation to the race of Pandu; for even now they gravely assert that none but giants could have raised such ponderous masses. When I assured them that I had seen blocks of twice the size of the largest drawn upon carts in England, they politely shrugged their shoulders, and seemingly assented, saying, 'It may be so' (hoga); but they evidently did not believe it. I am convinced, however, that none of them knew the exact size of these blocks of limestone, and that they have only a vague impression of their magnitude being much too great for the weakened powers of man in this iron age to move. sured several of these stones,—one lying to the right of the gateway of the Avantipura temple was  $10 \times 5 \times 2\frac{1}{2}$  feet,—and Vigne∥ mentions one of almost exactly the same size, over the entrance to the inner chamber of Marttand. Its dimensions were not less than 10 feet in length, by about a yard in thick-The lower roofing-stone of the Payach temple is 8 feet square by 4 feet in height. As a cubic foot of the Kashmirian limestone weighs 1664 lbs., each of the above blocks must weigh nearly 17 tons. But even such massive blocks, although heavy enough for all purposes of solidity, and sufficiently large for the greatest stretch of Kashmirian intercolumniations, were much too small to suit the exaggerated ideas which had been formed of Pándavan architecture. Accordingly we find even the sober Ferishta gravely asserting that 'many of the stones are from 40 to 60 feet in length, and from 3 to 15 feet in thickness and width,' or just four times the actual size of the blocks which I have measured. The other dimensions given by him are also much exaggerated. Thus, he says that the walls of the quadrangles are from '500 to 600 feet in length, and in many parts nearly 100 feet in height.' The longest side of the Marttand quadrangle is 249 feet on the exterior, and the height of the gateway was about 54 feet, or just one half of the dimensions stated."

M. von Hammer Purgstall, in a paper published in the Journal Asiatique of Paris for January, "On the Chivalry of the Arabs anterior to that of Europe," has indicated the probable influence of the former upon the latter, besides scattering in his path some valuable philological facts. He adopts for his text an observation of M. Fauriel, in his history of Provençal poetry, on the connection between the term galaubier, which amongst the Provençals was synonymous with 'valiant,' 'chivalric,' and the Arabic word galab and galeba, denoting to prevail over,' 'to overcome.'

M. Hammer Purgstall, in the course of his examination of the proper sense of this word, remarks that travellers have incorrectly rendered the device, so often repeated on the walls of the Alhambra, in which the word occurs, "La galib illallah," by 'There is no conqueror but God,' the true sense being, 'There is none other than God who is all prevailing.'

Galib, he further observes, is one of the names or epithets of Ali, and occurs as such in a poem of the Diwan, which passes under his name (but was more probably the work of Sherif Mortheda, who died A.D. 1044), and it bears in the poem the sense of 'hero,' or rather 'chevalier,' not that of 'conqueror,' which is commonly given to it.

Adverting to the vestment which distinguished the Arabian chevalier, M. Hammer-Purgstall observes that it was not a cuiras, and a robe, but, strange to say, "a pair of breeches," as is distinctly mentioned by Abul-Feda:—"In this year, 607 (A.D. 1210), arrived certain ambassadors from the Khalif to the kings of the provinces, that they might drink his health in the cup of chivalry, and put on the breeches of chivalry." in another place, speaking of the death of that Khalif, he says:—
"He exerted himself to the utmost to make all put on the breeches of chivalry." The mark of elevation to the degree of knight, continues M. von Hammer, was, therefore, accompanied not only by toasting in the cup of chivalry, but likewise by gymnot only by toasting in the cup of chivalry, but likewise by gymnot only by toasting in the cup of chivalry. The nastic exercises serviceable to the occupations of the knight. interval between the word of the Prophet, who declared his son-in-law Ali a knight at the battle of Ohod, and the chivalric embassy of the Khalif Nasir-li-dinillah, comprehends six centuries (from 607 to 1210), so that Arabian chivalry is four centuries older than the European. It is worthy of remark, that this Khalif was contemporary with Saladin, to whom he had sent a diploma of prince a year before he had himself been created a knight by Sheikh Abdol Jebbar. The time of Saladin and of Richard Cœur de Lion,-namely, the close of the twelfth century,—was the most illustrious period of the Christian chivalry. "Arabian chivalry, therefore," observes M. Purgstall, "was longer-lived than the European, which did not survive three centuries." M. Fauriel says that the most ancient vestiges of the two chivalries were to be found amongst the Arabs of Andalusia; and that they exist still recorded in Arabic works, most of which are unexplored. The chivalric sentiments of honour, valour, generosity, delicacy towards females, abound in the earliest poems of the Arabs, especially in the two Hamasa, that of Al-Bohtori as well as that of Aboo-Temmam.

MAIL, ALLEN'S INDIAN

WEDNESDAY, June 6, 1849.

THE exploit performed by the force under Major-General Sir Walter Gilbert, in the pursuit of the Affghans, deserves more distinct and conspicuous notice than it has received in England: although it failed in its main purpose, that of intercepting and punishing Dost Mahomed Khan, it realized every other collateral object, whilst it proved the sterling qualities of the Anglo-Indian soldier.

The force placed under the orders of the Major-General for this special service, consisting of Bengal and Bombay troops, infantry and cavalry, European and native,* passed the Jelum with considerable difficulty, owing to the peculiar character of that river, and by the rapidity and decision of his movements, Sir Walter compelled the surrender of the Sikh army and of their commanders, with their matériel, at Hoormuk and at Rawul Pindee, putting, in fact, a finishing stroke to the campaign, as far as the Sikhs were concerned. Losing no time, he hastened after the retreating Affghans, and by a forced march of extraordinary celerity, considering the execrable condition of the roads, which were scarcely practicable for artillery, reached Attock on the 17th March, the Affghans, taken by surprise, flying across the Indus by the bridge of boats, which they commenced burning. They were forced from their purpose, when only half completed, by our horse artillery, and resumed their flight. On the 19th, the Indus was passed, notwithstanding the partial destruction of the bridge. The remaining boats were placed at equal distances from each other, secured by strong anchorage and ropes; trees were felled, which were laid like joists from boat to boat, and covered with boughs, soil, and shingle, which formed a narrow road, over which the guns, cavalry, infantry, camels, and baggage passed without an accident; the elephants, refusing to trust the frail structure, were allowed to swim across the river.

As soon as a sufficient force had passed, it pushed on into the Geedur Gullee, a defile three miles long, from ten to twelve feet wide, the sides steep, and which the Affghans might have defended against a much stronger force than ours. On the following day the whole of our troops were at Naoshera, the scene of the battle between the Sikhs and Affghans in 1823. At noon of the 21st they reached Peshawur, which was thus saved from plunder, and perhaps demolition; but the enemy, by the sufferance of the Khyburies, being only a day in advance, were enabled to place the pass between them and their pursuers.

All the accounts of these forced marches concur in eulogizing the zeal, alacrity, and exertions of the troops, the cheerfulness with which they bore fatigue and foot-wounds, as well as want of rest and food. It was, in short, a service which reflects equal honour upon the general and his troops, fulfilling the declaration of the Governor-General, that Dost Mahomed Khan and the Affghan army must be driven from the province of Peshawur before there could be any cessation of hostilities; and holding out to these treacherous neighbours a salutary warning, which may deter them from again crossing the Indus, either as principals or auxiliaries, in a war against us.

In the discussion of the Miscellaneous Estimates last year, in the House of Commons, Mr. Cobden and his confederates of the Manchester School of Financial Reform attacked the proposed vote of 9,827l. for the settlement on the island of Labuan. This year, upon the same occasion, the attack has been renewed; and it would seem that, whilst the energy of the assailants had increased, the spirit of the defenders languished.

The vote this year, to the same amount, includes items which certainly appear somewhat extraordinary if Mr. Cobden's assertion, that the settlers do not exceed ten, be correct; namely, 2,000l. for a governor and commander-inchief; 1,375l. for a lieutenant-governor and magistrate; 500l. for a master-attendant and postmaster; 500l. for a surveyor; 3,500l. for public buildings and contingent charges, &c. The last advices from the colony, which are to the 30th March, state that no new settlers had arrived, nor was there as yet much additional traffic with the natives; "road-making and ditching were the chief occupations."

Labuan was designed to be a second Singapore; Mr. Hawes, last year, distinctly declared that he believed it would become so; but that settlement made a much more rapid progress, in spite of obstacles which do not stand in the way of Labuan. Mr. Cobden gave a curious account of the origin of the settlement, which he professed to derive from special sources of information. He said:—

"We owed the possession of Labuan to a piece of sentimentalism. An adventurous gentleman, sailing in his yacht, took possession of Sarawak, on the coast of Borneo, and was called the Rajah of Sarawak, the former rajah, who ceded the district to him, having been a pirate. He came to England, and by means of enormous puffing,—by sentimental puffing,—persuaded the people of this country that he was going to settle Borneo. What did he do? First of all he was consular agent to himself. He was Rajah Brooke, of Sarawak, and was consul to himself for Borneo. Being Rajah of Sarawak, he took charge as governor of the island of Labuan, about 300 miles distant, the difficulty of communicating with which was greater than that of communicating with England; and, being unable to be in both places, he appointed for Labuan a licutenant-governor to discharge the duties. This licutenant-governor, over a settlement without any population, had a salary of £1,375. He wished to ask the Government whether it was seriously proposed to continue this establishment in Labuan?

Mr. Labouchere had evidently prepared an ambush for the great missionary of Financial Reform. He produced, to his confusion, a memorial from the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, presented, in 1846, to Sir Robert Peel, then Minister, imploring him to establish a settlement on Labuan, and "not to suffer any delay in securing a position so important, and in every point of view so desirable, for the convenience and protection of our China trade, as a refuge for our shipping in case of distress, as a bulwark in the event of war, and as a central depôt for our trade in the Eastern Archipelago."

Last year, the establishment was justified by the Government on the ground that the island would soon become the nucleus of an extensive legitimate commerce, and would extinguish piracy in those seas. This year, as neither of those objects seems likely to be soon attained, the Government suggested, though not with much confidence, another, namely, the coal expected to be obtained from the island, which Mr. Hawes "had reason to believe" would be supplied to the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company at half the price they now paid for fuel! This was a little too much for the House, which indulged in some mirth at the under-secretary's expense. If Labuan is to be merely a coat-depôt, there can be no doubt that 9,8271. per annum is a great deal too much to pay for it.

The object of Mr. Cobden and his party is transparent; it is to reduce the national expenditure to a minimum at any sacrifice. If we lose a colony, or surrender an advantageous station to an encroaching rival, and gain a few thousands thereby, the balance in Mr. Cobden's ledger is written off to profit. We should adjust the account differently. Nevertheless, there is, we fear, some foundation for his charge against the Government, that their establishments are in many cases upon a scale disproportioned to the exigency; in the present case, if Labuan attracts no settlers and no trade, and returns nothing but coal of uncertain quality for the steamers of the Peninsular and Oriental Company, many persons will join Mr. Cobden in pronouncing the establishment in Labuan "inordinate, extravagant, and profligate."

We are, however, far from undervaluing the importance of a settlement in Borneo, which is destined at some time to become a vast producing country, and the theatre of a mighty commerce. Besides its advantages of position and climate, the fertility of its soil, and the facilities it affords for internal communication, it abounds with iron and coal, the two great instruments of manufacturing industry. We have now before us an account of a journey into the interior of Borneo Proper, recently performed by Mr. Burns, who has been the first to visit the country of the Kayans, where he found coal and iron in profusion. "The coal and iron fields of the Balawi or Rajang," he says,

"Are more extensive than any yet discovered on the island. From the river Baram, coal is traced to the upper parts of the Bintulu, and thence southward to the Rajang river; on the left bank of which, at Tujol Nang, there is a seam exposed upwards of thirteen feet in thickness. At different other parts of the river, and also in several of its branches, coal is found in abundance. From Tujol Nang, the strike of the coal is southward, across Dragon's Plain. It is again found in the river Lang Pila (a distance from the former place of about fifty miles), where it is extensively exposed on the surface, and has been in a state of ignition for several years. Iron ore, of a quality yielding from sixty to eighty per cent. of iron, abounds in the Balawi or Rajang district, from about forty miles from the coast to the source of the river, or over a district comprising nearly one-half of the extreme breadth of the island. The iron manufactured from the ore of the above district is much preferred to that of Europe by the Malays and other natives of Borneo, as being superior. If such be the case, it is certainly worthy of notice. If the ore of Borneo, by the rude manner of smelting practised by the Kayans, makes better iron than that of England, with all the advantages possessed by the smelters of that country, we must infer that, if the science and superior genius of Englishmen were employed in the preparation of iron from the rich mines of Borneo, this valuable metal could be produced cheaper, and in quantity greater and quality superior, to that for a scanty supply of which the trade of Great Britain is dependent on the arbitrary monopolies of Sweden."

Suspending, for a time, our opinion upon the policy (in which term we include the justice as well as the expediency) of annexing the Punjab to the British empire in the East, regarding it, in the phraseology of the day, as "an accomplished fact," it must be acknowledged to be the most important and valuable acquisition which that empire has ever made. We are not blind to the danger attending so vast an extension of territory; we do not deny that the annihilation of a native state is an evil, and we are aware that difficulties and perils in new and unforeseen forms may arise from the incorporation with our overgrown dominions of so large a territory, inhabited by peculiar races, as little known to us as we are to them. Add to these considerations the heavy weight which must fall upon the encumbered finances of British India, until the resources of the country can be properly developed and applied to the charges of its government, and it must be owned that the acquisition is not unaccompanied by drawbacks which might prevail upon a prudent statesman to refuse the tempting gift were the option completely in his power.

These objections, however, have, in a less degree, lain in the way of all our territorial acquisitions upon the continent of India, and they have been surmounted by the only means whereby masses of mankind, either of homogeneous or alien race, are retained in subjection to the ruling power, namely, good government. It has been often said that we hold India by the sword; but that sword is in the hands of the natives of the country, and it is the mildness of our rule compared with that of preceding conquerors, nay, of Hindu princes, the universal tolerance manifested by us towards the religious opinions and social institutions of the people of India, which has really won for us our supremacy. By the same principles, guided by long experience of the Eastern character, and by the enlightened views and maxims which have improved the theory of government in general, our administration of the Punjab may make it a source of equal benefit to the rulers and the ruled.

Of the capacity of the country to become rich and flourishing, no one can entertain a doubt. "There is, perhaps, no inland country of the globe," says Burnes, "which possesses greater facilities for commerce than the Punjab, and few more rich in the mineral, vegetable, and animal kingdoms." A later writer, Capt. Cunningham, observes that "the country of the Sikhs, being situated in a medium degree of latitude, corresponding nearly to that of North Africa and the American states, and consisting either of broad plains, not much above the sea-level, or of mountain ranges which rise two or three miles into the air, possesses every variety of climate, and every description of natural produce." The Bari doab (between the Beas and the Ravi) is susceptible of the highest cultivation; such is the strength of its soil, that Burnes says a crop of wheat, before yielding its grain, is twice mowed down as fodder for cattle, and then produces an abundant harvest. The doab between the Ravi and the Chenab is of the same character, capable of being converted by irrigation, which is easy, into a garden; but the canals have been neglected and suffered to decay. From Lahore to Jelalpore on the Jelum, Dr. Jameson found vast uncultivated tracts of the richest soil, overgrown with rank jungle, hillocks marking the sites of flourishing towns and villages that had disappeared.

The state of government in the country during the last century,—the domination of the Sikhs scarcely reaches to so long a period,—explains its retrogression, and a better system will soon, as in Malwa and Rajpootana, revive the slumbering energies of industry, and reconcile to the rule of Europeans a people who have known no other rule than that of foreigners. Their partition into so many different races and creeds is an incident which, by judicious policy, may be converted from an element of danger into one of security. If 500,000 Sikhs, professing a creed highly intolerant to both Mahomedans and Hindus, could keep in subjection 4,000,000 of souls by mere brute force, surely a more liberal treatment on our part would render the task of government lighter and easier.

The Chinese Encyclopædia of Ma-twan-lin relates, as recorded in the annals of China, that, at different periods, showers of yellow earth, cinders, and blood, have fallen. These phenomena are easily explained, if we remember the violence of the winds which occasionally arise in Mongolia and the north of China, as mentioned by the traveller Timkowski and some of the missionaries, and which carry fine particles of earth and sand, which fall in the shape of coloured rain. In like manner, ships have been covered at forty leagues from the coast of Africa by the sand of the Sahara; and the ashes of the volcano of St. Vincent, in the Antilles, and of Hecla, in Iceland, are often transported by the higher currents of air to still more considerable distances.—Biot. On the 14th May last, a shower of black rain fell in Ireland over an area of more than 200 square miles. It was of the colour of ordinary writing ink, and a quantity of it, sent to the Royal Dublin Society, has been subjected to an analysis, which may suggest another theory for the Chinese coloured rain.

PENINSULAR & ORIENTAL STEAM-NAVIGATION COMPANY.

The half-yearly meeting of this Company was held on the 31st May, and the usual dividend of 4 per cent., free from income tax, for the six months ending the 31st March, was declared.

The Report stated that, no casualty from sea risk having happened to the fleet of the Company during the last year, the insurance fund had increased. Regarding the transit through Egypt, the return of Sir John Pirie, and the "entire success of his mission" to the present Viceroy, were announced in the following manner:—

"The Pasha received Sir John with marked distinction and courtesy, and readily acquiesced in every suggestion made to him for the improvement of the transit; and was moreover pleased to declare, that the increased expense consequent thereupon would be of secondary consideration to the perfecting the transit through his country. His Highness has authorized the directors to order, for his account, one additional steam-vessel for the Nile, to be fitted with all the improved accommodation which experience suggests; also two paddle-wheel steamers for the Mahmoudieh Canal. These canal-boats will be devoted to the conveyance of passengers only, and the baggage will be conveyed in future by track-boats. A small steamer, now building at Boulac, will shortly be placed at Suez, for the embarkation and landing of passengers and baggage from the India steamers, which will be productive of great comfort and convenience. A considerable improvement has already been effected in the landing and embarkation of passengers and baggage at Alexandria, and commodious storehouses have also been erected there, and at the Mahmoudieh Canal. The occasional difficulties and delays at Atfeh will in future be avoided, by the intended erection of a jetty and landing-place there; but in most cases the new canal steamers will pass through the locks, and go alongside the Nile steamers, and the change from one to the other will thus be easily and conveniently effected. The navigation of the canal is to be improved by deepening, for which object three dredging-machines are now in operation. Besides these intended improvements, others of much importance have already been recently effected. The route of eighty-two English miles, between Cairo and Suez, has been partly Macadamized, and is divided into sixteen stations, at each of which horses can now be changed in from eight to ten minutes; whereas formerly this operation usually occupied from twenty to thirty minutes. The whole distance, from the Nile (say Cairo) to the Red Sea, can now be performed

On the subject of steam-communication with Australia, for which the Company has offered a contract, the directors intimate that the Government have not yet issued any decision as to the contemplated route, but that the parties who, when tenders were invited, also submitted a proposal, have withdrawn it, and have abandoned further attempts for establishing the projected company through which they proposed to carry out their plans.

Concluding their Report, this being a meeting when they present no detailed balance-sheet, the directors say, "That the Company's affairs continue to progress satifactorily, and they feel assured that the statement of accounts which it will be their duty to submit at the next annual meeting will be such as to merit entire confidence in the soundness of the undertaking, and in the efficiency of its management."—Times.

Indian and European Morals.—The following is from the Probhakar Hindu paper:—"Strange that increase of civilization should so often be associated with a proportionate increase of crime! England at present stands highest in the scale, and it is at the same time the focus of indecency and deceit. It will take our country folks full one thousand years to practise with success the wholesale defalcations and roguery that have of late been proved against several distinguished members of the civilized European community. The superiority of our labouring classes over those of Europe is so great, that we despair of ever being able adequately to describe it."

GREEK ASTRONOMY seems to have been first introduced amongst the Arabs by Khalid ben Yazyd, who flourished towards the end of the first century of the Hijra; he had several books translated from the Greek into Arabic, and was in possession of a celestial globe which had been made by Ptolemy; and so rapidly did this science take root and spread amongst the followers of Mahomet, that the Moors in Spain were, as early as the ninth century after Christ, the instructors of their northern neighbours. We find in the writings of the Venerable Bede the words Alidada and Almajest, which bear witness to the Arabic origin of part of his astronomical knowledge.—Sprenger.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LORD GOUCH.—We have much pleasure in announcing, that in reward for the recent crowning victory of Goojerat, Lord Gough will receive a step in the peerage, and will be immediately created a Viscount of the United Kingdom, in addition to the honours and rewards so worthily bestowed upon him by the Queen and Parliament for his former distinguished services and successes .- Observer.

SIR JASPER NICOLLS, who died on the 4th May, at his seat, Goodrist, near Reading, entered the army as an ensign in the 45th Foot, in 1793. He served under Lord Lake in the Mahratta war, was present at the battle of Argaum and at the siege and storming of Gawilghur. In 1805, as major, he joined Lord Catheart's army in Hanover; in the following year he proceeded with the expedition under General Craufurd to South America, and commanded a column at the assault on Buenos Ayres, in 1807. In 1808 he embarked for Spain, and commanded a battalion of the 14th Foot at the battle of Corunna in 1809, for which services he received the medal; soon afterwards, as lieutenant-colonel, he accompanied the expedition to Walcheren. He subsequently served many years in the East Indies; during the Nepaul war he commanded the force which conquered the province of Kumaoon in 1815; he afterwards commanded a brigade in the Pindarree war, and at the siege of Bhurtpore, in 1825, he commanded the 2nd infantry division, which carried the left breach on the 18th of January, 1826. For this service he was the same year nominated K.C.B. In 1833 Sir Jasper Nicolls became colonel of the 93rd Foot; in 1840 he was removed to the 98th Foot, and in 1843 to the 5th Fusiliers. Sir Jasper Nicolls was Commander in Chief in the East Indies from 1839 Nicolls was Commander-in Chief in the East-Indies from 1839 to 1843.

SIR EDWARD PAGET, another ex-Commander-in-Chief in India, late Governor of Chelsea Hospital, died on the 13th May.

The mythology of the Dyaks of Borneo includes amongst a multitude of spirits, good and evil, a hateful one named Raja Hantuen, 'King of Spells,' who imparts certain of his powers to men and women, thence termed Hantuen. These demoniacs are believed to be capable of divesting themselves of body, during night, and with nothing but head and intestines, flying abroad, visiting graves, where they devour the hearts of newly-interred corpses; sucking the blood of sleeping men, and when morning dawns, returning to their described carcases, gorged with blood, mingling as usual with their fellow-beings. Strange tales are related of the horrid doings of these Hantuen.

NATIVE PRESS OF INDIA .- A newspaper, called the Malor Akbar, in Urdu and Nagree, lithographed, has been commenced at Indore. It is conducted by Dhurma Narain Pundit, the head teacher of the native school at Indore, a man of talent and education, who distinguished himself at the college of Delhi as a The first number contains an agreeable notice of Oonkar Mindalla, one of the places of Hindoo pilgrimage on the Nerbudda, near Indore; then follow an interesting account of the opium trade in Malwa, and a translation from Malcolm's description of the hot springs in Hindostan; with intelligence from the Punjab, Gwalior, Malwa, and the countries around. The whole is exclusively under native charge; the stones are from the neighbouring quarries, the press being of Delhi manufacture.

A Journal of Summer Time in the Country. By the Rev. ROBERT ARIS WILLMOTT. London. Parker.

This little work, new in its conception and admirable in its execution, will take powerful hold of every reader of taste. It is a successful attempt to associate mind and intellect with visible nature; to connect the idealities of poetry with its realities; to develope the secret fibres which link our moral sympathies with the impressions produced through the senses. With a memory replenished with the noblest and most beautiful thoughts of ancient and modern poets, Mr. Willmott has a fancy which readily assimilates with every image suggested by "rural sights and rural sounds," and he pours forth, in elegant language, a profusion of these mingled treasures of the imagination. An ordinary reader will be surprised to find how many exquisite pictures in a poet he has passed over without feeling their true poetic force; and on the other hand, how many trains of delightful thought are generated by a bird, a rill, a leaf, a shadow. A single ray from a poet's fancy irradiates and transforms the commonest objects, like the effect which Mr. Willmott attributes to the orb of day: "A beam of the setting sun has just gilded the middle of the stream; the shadow of the leaves brightens, and an aureate tinge burnishes the water."

The Journal commences on the 4th of May and concludes on the 11th August. We take at random a passage from the Journal, in order to show what it is like:—

"July 15th .- Most people know the soothing influence of a walk --

' Beneath th' umbrageous multitude of leaves,'

Where—
'The stealing shower is scarce to patter heard.'

It was the only rural sensation which Johnson acknowledged. But there is another woodland pleasure he would have been insensible to; that of stooping in calm reverie over a running brook, and watching the reflections of trees in the water. I have spent the sunny fragments of a sweet afternoon in this visionary enjoyment, not without endeavouring to moralize what I saw. These leaves in the stream seemed to be images of slight circumstances in life—little things that influence our hopes, successes, consolations, and paine. We are not only pleased, but turned by a feather. The history of a man is a calendar of straws. If the nose of Cleopatra had been shorter, said Pascal in his brilliant way, Anthony might have kept the world. The Mohammedans have a tradition, that when their Prophet concealed himself in Mount Shur, his pursuers were baffled by a spider's web over the mouth of the cave. The shadows of leaves in water, then, are to me so many lessons of life. I call to mind Demosthenes, rushing from the Athenian assembly, burning with shame, and in the moment of degradation encountered by Satyrus. It was the apparition of his good spirit, and changed his fortune. The hisses of his countrymen melted into distance. He learns the art of Elocution; and when he next ascended the bema, his lip was roughened by no grit of the pebble. Again: Socrates, meeting Xenophon in a narrow gateway, stopped him, by extending his stick across the path, and inquiring, 'How a man might attain to virtue and honour?' Xenophon could not answer; and the philosopher, bidding him follow, became thenceforward his master in Ethics. These incidents were shadows of leaves on the stream; but they conducted Demosthenes into the temple of eloquence, and placed Xenophon by the side of Livy."

There is more real poetry, more concentrated thought, more deep feeling, and, we may add, more genuine moral and religious sentiment in these 200 pages than in many huge volumes.

MAHOMEDAN MAGISTRATES.—A poor man, in the East, went to a Mahomedan cazee, and asked what should be the penalty of one who had wantonly killed a cat? "Let him," said the judge, "fill the skin with gold and give it to the poor." The poor man rejoined, "your son has killed my cat." The cazee, as if finishing the sentence, added, "or hay will do." Hence a proverb, applied to the decision of a partial judge: "if there be no gold, hay will do."

UNMARRIED PERSONS beyond the age of twenty-two years are in Siam considered to harbour something devilish about them, and to be guarded against by charms and philters!

TAUGHT, ON MODERATE TERMS.

AT No. 58. BURTON CRESCENT, FROM 10 A.M. TO 1 P.M.

BY DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.,

HINDUSTANI & PERSIAN LANGUAGES.

HINDUSTANI-ENGLISH & ENGLISH-HINDUSTANI.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.

In One Volume, royal 8vo. price £2. 12s. 6d.

In One Volume, royal 8vo. price £2. 12t. 63.

*g.* This work was undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—vis. a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgment of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one volume royal octavo, of about 1,000 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The First Part—Hindustani and English—contains more words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The Second Part—English and Hindustani—is also by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every advantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive patronage.

HINDUSTANI MANUAL: a Pocket Companion for those who visit India in any capacity; intended to facilitate the essential attainments of conversing with fluency, and composing with accuracy, in the most useful of all the languages spoken in our Eastern Empire.—In Two Parts. PART I.—A compendious Grammar of the Language, with Exercises on its more prominent peculiarities; together with a Selection of useful Phrases, Dialogues, and Subjects for translation into English.

PART II.—A Vocabulary of useful Words, English and Hindustani; shewing at the same time the difference of idiom between the two Languages.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.
Second Edition, considerably improved. 18mo. bound, 5a, 6d.

The BAGH-O-BAHAR; consisting of entertaining Tales in the Hindustani Language. Progress of the PUNJAB, and of the Rise and Progress of the Sect and Nation of the Sikhs, including a full Account of the Military Operations on the Banks of the Sutlet in 1846, and the Proclamations and Treaties of the Governor-General of India relating thereto. By THOMAS THORNTON, Esq. 2 vols. post 8vo. cloth lettered, price 21s. price 21s.

"These volumes should be in the library of every one who feels an interest in the recent military exploits of our Army of the Sutlej, or in our future political relations of the Punjab. The work has, indeed, this double value;—It is valuable for present and permanent reference.....Independently, however, from any temporary interest which these volumes may derive from the recent events in the Punjab, they present much curious matter to the historical scudent, as well with regard to the religious character of the sect from which has aprung the warlike race of modern Sikhs, as with respect to the character and policy of Runjeet Singh."—John Bull.

"The work gives all the information on the history and topography of the Punjab that could be desired; and in the fulness and completeness of its details, and the diligence with which information has been collected, from every available source, constitutes this the best and most authentic work extant on the important country of which it treats."—Britannia.

  "The title of the book will show it comprehensive character, and those who wish to have an Encyclopædia of Information on Eastern and Southern history, government, literature, manners, productions (natural and industrial), commerce, excepting, in fact, but physical science, and not without a good deal even on that, will here find what they require. It is a condensation of the content of multifarious columes, and may justly be termed "many things in few words." If read, it will impart to the student nearly all that is known on the subject to which it relates, and afford him, withat, much entertainment. If kept as a book of reference, few questions relating to Eastern affairs can arise for which it will not furnish a complete encour."—INDIAN MAIL.

ADDISCOMBE-THE VACATION.

M. FREDERIC I. MINASI continues to read the Mathematical Course for the Engineers and Artillery. Gentlemen desirous of securing their own time must make an early application.

Parkfield House, Islington.

TO LADIES travelling, or while otherwise exposed to the scorching rays of the sun and heated particles of dust, ROWLANDS' KALYDOR will prove a most refreshing preparation for the complexion, dispelling the cloud of languor and relaxation, aliaying all heat and irritability, and inmediately affording the pleasing sensation attending restored elasticity and healthful state of the skin. Composed of choice exotics of balsamic nature, utterly free from all mineral admixture, and pleasing and delightful in its effects, Rowlands' Kalydor tends to neutralize the action of the atmosphere upon the skin, and to promote that healthy action of the microscopic vessels, by which its general well-being and the beauty of its appearance are so essentially promoted. Freckles, tan, spots, pimples, flushes, and discolorations, ify before its application, and give place to delicate simothness, and the glow of beauty and of bloom. In cases of sunburn, or stings of insects, its virtues have long been acknowledged, Its purifying and refreshing properties have obtained its exclusive selection by Her Majesty the Queen, the Court, and the Royal Family of the aristocracy, from the sultry climes of India to the frozen realms of the Cray.—** Beware of spurious "Kalydors" for sale, containing mineral astringents utterly ruinous to the complexion, and by their repellent action endangering health. It is imperative on purchasers to see that the words—"Rowlands" Kalydors" are on the wrapper, and "A. Rowland & Garden," also engraved on the Government stamp affixed on each bottle. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. Sold by the proprietors, and by chemists and perfumers. TO LADIES travelling, or while otherwise exposed to MPORTANT PATENT IMPROVEMENT in CHRONOMETERS and WATCHES.—E. J. DENT, 82, Strand, and 33, Cockspur Street, by special appointment Chronometer, Watch, and Clock Maker to the Queen and H. R. H. Prince Albert, and who obtained the high distinction of receiving the Government Reward for the unparalleled performance of the best Chronometer ever submitted to twelve months' public trial, begs to acquaint the public that the manufacture of his Watches, Chronometers, and clocks is secured to him by three separate patents, respectively granted in 13%, 1340, and 1842.—Silver Lever Watches, jewelled in four holes, £6.6e. each; in gold cases, from £8 to £10 extra.—Gold Horizontal Watches, with gold dials, from £18.8 to £12.5e. each.—DENT'S "Appendix" to his recent work on "Time-keepers" is now ready for circulation.

FEET.—EASE in WALKING .- HALL and Co., Wellington Street, Strand, near Watchio Bridge. The Pannus Corium, or Leather-Cloth Boots and Shoes, are the softest and easiest ever worn. They yield to the action of the feet without the slightest pressure or drawing effect on the most sensitive corns, bunions, gout, or tenderness from any other cause. They resemble the finest leather, and are more durable. Hall and Co.'s Spring Boots supersed lacings or buttoning, and are a great comfort to the ankles. Their Waterproof Portable Dresses for Gentlemen, 21s.—Ladies' Cardinal Cloaks, with Hoods, 18s.; which can be carried in the pocket with convenience.

CHUBBS' LOCKS, FIRE-PROOF SAFES, and CASH-BOXES.—CHUBBS PATENT DETECTOR LOCKS give perfect security from filse keys and picklocks, and also detect any attempt to open them. They are made of all sizes, and for every purpose to which locks are applied, and are strong, secure, simple, and durable.

CHUBBS' PATENT LATCH, for front doors, counting house doors, &c., is simple in construction, low in price, and quite secure. The keys are particularly neat and portable.

CHUBBS' PATENT FIRE-PROOF SAFES, BOOKCASES, CHESTS, &c., made entirely of strong wrought iron, so as effectually to resist the falling of brick-work, timber, &c., in case of fire, and are also perfectly secure from the attacks of the most skilful burglars.

CHUBBS' CASH and DEED BOXES fitted with the detector locks.

Patronized by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and H.R.H. the Duchess of Kent. — Mr. THOMAS HOWARD'S SUCCEDANEUM, for stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soit state, without any pressure or pain, and soon becomes as hard as the enamel, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, and arresting the further progress of decay. All persons can use Mr. Howard's Succedaneum themselves with case, as full directions are enclosed. Price 2s. 6d. Prepared only by Mr. Thos. Howard, Surgeon-Dentist, 17, George-st., Hanover-square, who will send it into the country tree by post. Sold by Savory, 220, Regent-street; Sanger, 130, Oxford-street; Starkie, 4, Strand; Butler, 4, Cheapside; Johnston, 68, Cormbill, and all Medicine Vendors. Price 2s. 6d. Mr. Howard continues to supply the loss of teeth on his new system of self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. 17, George-street, Hanover-square. At home from 11 till 4.

PERSONS PARALYZED, &c.—EXTRAORDINARY CURE by HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—Copy of a letter from Captain E. F. Ferris, commanding Rampore forces, Rohlleund, India, Jan. 15, 1849.—"To Professor Holloway. Sir.—I deem that your wonderful medicines ought to be well known, and I take the liberty of reporting a miraculous cure under my own eye. An old woman had teen for the last two years quite bedridden, having entirely lost the use of her legs from the hip joint. Her limbs were apparently quite dead, and without the slightest feeling, but by the use of your Ointment and Pills she is quite restored. (Signed) E. F. Ferris."

Sold by all venders of medicines, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native venders of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

Bombay Messrs. Ritchie, Steuart, & Co.

The following peculiar advantages are offered by this Company:-

11. Their policies cover the risk of living and voyaging over a far larger portion of the globe than do those issued by any other Company in existence. They allow the assured to reside in the Australasian and North American colonies, and at the Cape of Good Hope. They also allow to the assured for the whole of life one passage out and home to any of those colonies. For British India a very moderate extra premium is charged, and the premium is reduced to the English scale on the return of the assured life to England for permanent residence.

the English scale on the return of the assured life to England for permanent residence.

Premiums may be paid, and claims settled at Sydney, where there is a Board of Directors and Trustees; and at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, where there are Agents.

A third of the premiums may remain unpaid for five years; nor is it necessary for the maintenance of the Assurance to pay up the premium at the end of that time, but the unpaid thirds may remain as a debt against the policy, if the interest be regularly paid upon them as the renewal premiums fall due.

ANNITATES.

ANNUTTIES.

The Annuities offered by the Company are on a more favourable scale than those offered by any other Companies, having been calculated with reference to the rates of Interest obtainable on Colonial Investments. Annuitants also participate in the profits.

heartily recommend it."—Naval and Military Gazette, March 3, 1849.

"Messrs. ALLEN have just issued a finely-engraved Map of the Punjab and Sikh Territory, with due attention to the spots where our gallant troops have so valiantly fought. Who, at the present moment, would not pore over such a Map,—with interest point out where the brave Cureton fell, or where Edwardes earned the wreath that now adorns his youthful brow? Or, if we take a more painful glance, how many mothers, sisters, friends, will not, with mourned eyes, wander in their imagination along the banks of the Chenab, and mark the spot upon the Map where a son, a brother, or a friend lies buried in an honourable grave on the bloody field of Chillianwallah? And such a Map was wanting, and Messrs. ALLEN have at once provided one with great care and skill. This Map folds up in a neat cover, and can be carried in the pocket."—Morning Chronicle, March 6, 1849.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

ALTHOUGH the cessation of hostilities in the Punjab deprives the intelligence brought by the present mail of the exciting quality which belonged to that of the past few months, it is by no means devoid of interest.

First in the catalogue of political incidents is the escape from custody of the Maharani Chunda Koonwur, the mother of the deposed Maharajah Dhuleep Sing, to the extraordinary history of whose past adventures* is now added another remarkable chapter, for the circumstances of her evasion and flight recall the illusions of the Arabian Nights. It appears that this lady arrived at Chunar, from Benares, on the 6th of April, and was lodged in the state prison in the fort, whence the European invalids, and also the sentries of the Shekhawuttee brigade, were removed, and (in deference, probably, to the distinguished prisoner's prejudices) the Maharani was left entirely in the charge of a party of the 65th regiment of Native Infantry, one invalid sergeant excepted, whose duty it was to sleep at the outer gateway of the prison. For some days previous to her evasion, the voice of the lady behind the purdal had undergone a change, noticed by the officer who visited her, which was attributed by the lady to a cold. On the night of the 18th the discovery was made that she had fled. A letter from Sultanpore Benares asserts that the Maharani never entered the walls of the prison; that she escaped from Benares the day her female attendant was seized; that the Rajah of Betteeah (who was encamped near Benares) was suspected of having aided in her escape, and detachments of the 8th irregular cavalry had been detached in pursuit of two suspicious parties, one consisting of three palkees, reported to contain ladies belonging to the rajah's zenana, that went in the direction of Allahabad, and another a boat, similarly occupied, which was observed to row down the river with the utmost speed, and which had been noticed at Chunar for a day or two before the escape of the Ranee was made known. The Benares Recorder, however, states that it had been clearly proved that she was at Chunar, and escaped in the disguise of a person called the Seenawallee, the very afternoon after her arrival, namely, the 6th.

" It appears that the Seenawallee, as she is called, is the wife of one of the male attendants, and lived out of the prison, having ingress and egress; and on the afternoon of the 6th, when the prison gates were opened to admit the bhishtee and sweeper, a slave girl, named Majee, pointing to the Ranee in disguise, told the havildar on duty to let her out, as she was the Seenawallee, who lived in the bazaar, and was always allowed to pass in and out of the Ranee's apartments, both at Benares and here. The havildar at first refused to do so, but was talked over by the girls, and let her out. She had got as far as the gate of the prison enclosure, where she was stopped by the sentry posted these; the havildar ordered him to let her out, as she was only the Seenawaltee, and out she went. This being accomplished, she had nothing more to do but to walk out of the fort without further interruption, the woman being at that time in Benares, though she must have reached Chunar the next day in company with the Ranee's baggage; and in order not to awaken any suspicion in the havildar's mind, the veritable Seenawallee made her appearance at the prison gate, and was passed in and out by him until the morning of the 19th, when, doubtless, the slave girls, thinking that their mistress had had a good start, considered it time to declare her departure."

Having eluded her keepers, this wonderful woman assumed the costume and character of a holy man, or pilgrim,—a part not easy for any impostor, especially a female, to sustain; and in this disguise she travelled, for three weeks, 300 miles, through the most populous part of Bengal, and, whilst all were speculating whither she had gone, made her appearance, on the 27th, in Nepaul, within two marches of the capital. She applied to that court for leave to find a home amongst the hills, preferring a life of freedom even in that bleak country to a splendid prison in a more congenial clime. The determination of the court of Katmandoo was not known; but it is expected that, should her surrender be demanded, it will be at once conceded. "The planning and execution of her escape, and her journey to Nepaul," observes the Bombay Times, "disclose a degree of ingenuity and enterprise on her part and that of her abettors, as well as a want of care and circumspection on ours, we were not at all prepared for. That the Light of the Harem, so famous for her profligacy and beauty, should for such a length of time have successfully enacted the character of saint, seems the strangest of all her transformations."

A Court of Inquiry was sitting at Chunar to investigate the matter, rumours being in circulation that the guard had been bribed.

Shere Sing, who was under surveillance at Lahore, is likewise reported to have broken his parole, and escaped. This person informed one of our officers that it was his full intention, on quitting Rusoolnuggur and Moong, to get supplies for his army at Goojrat, and then push on at once for Umritsir, which he intended to plunder and sack, and forthwith proceed by long marches to our provinces, fully persuaded, by the time he entered the Jullundur Dooab, that the whole of the Manjha country would join his army, and that, on his arrival at Lodiana, he would be much too powerful in numbers for Sir Dudley Hill's reserve to oppose his progress to Delhi!

The next incident of importance is a somewhat serious collision between a party of the Nizam's troops, commanded by Brigadier Onslow, and some rebels.

Appa Sahib, the pretender to the raj of Nagpore, having taken the field with about 600 Rohillas, apparently bent upon plundering Ellichpore, Brigadier Onslow, commanding that division, marched against them on the 23rd April, with a force consisting of one howitzer, two guns, 150 horsemen of the second Nizam's cavalry, and nine companies of the Nizam's infantry, and arrived within twelve miles of the enemy before any alarm was given. On the 29th the insurgents, learning that the troops were approaching by forced marches, made immediate preparations to escape. Hearing of this, Brigadier Onslow immediately started, in hopes of overtaking them, and reached the village of Kullum about daybreak on the 30th. The insurgents had now taken up a position among the hills, about six miles off, and though the men were fagged with long forced marches, they begged so earnestly to be led against the enemy, that the troops proceeded without halting. The insurgents showed large bodies on the spurs of the hills, and unfurled gaudy standards, opening a fire from the various ridges and ravines, which had hitherto concealed them. Our artillery also opened, and threw shrapmel; the enemy on this retired deeper into their fastnesses. The infantry now pushed on in skirmishing order: they were fired on as they advanced—on their close approach the enemy withdrew. They were thus driven from range to range till our troops, overcome with an eighteen hours' march without food or rest, were literally unable to pursue them. Numberless hand-to-hand encounters occurred, and the conduct of the men appears to have been beyond all praise. Just as the contest closed, Brigadier Onslow's horse slipped and threw him over a precipice: he fell on his head and was killed on the spot. The Rohillas lost a chief and many men; the pretender escaped.

The Punjab was tranquil. The latest reports represent the people in general to be satisfied with the change, having got rid of their severe task-masters. Some writers from thence take a gloomy view of the future; they complain of the grievous impolicy of allowing Chutter Sing and Shere Sing to remain at large, and of the unpromising nature of our arrangements for the administration and defence of the country, - opinions which are probably coloured, more or less, by the private feelings of the writers. It is now confidently asserted that there is to be no augmentation of the regular army; that eighteen Sikh local corps are to be raised (instead of ten), and that, although no General Order authorizing these levies has yet appeared, men are being covertly enlisted, most of them old Sikh soldiers, who cannot be depended upon. "What a drain upon the corps of the line the officering these eighteen Sikh corps will involve!" a Punjab writer exclaims, "besides these new civil commissionerships; how few officers will be left for regimental duty, and how shamefully overworked those few will be!"

The final determination as to the permanent government of the Punjab was not yet known; but the opinion that it will be united to the North-West Provinces, in the shape of a fourth Presidency, seems more general at Calcutta, than that it will be placed under the same management as Scinde. The country is said to be inundated with British political officers, civil and military, and, according to the Delhi Gazette, the arrangements were already beginning to assume an appearance of system and consistency. Lieutenant J. E. Fraser proceeds, with a Deputy Commissioner, to Shahpoor, on the left bank of the Jelum, in the direction of Munkara; Mr. E. Bayley has obtained charge of Goojrat; Mr. P. Egerton proceeds, in the first instance, to Wuzeerabad, and then to Jhung; Mr. Edgeworth is appointed to Mooltan; Mr. Wedderburn proceeds in the same direction, as also Mr. J. H. Prinsep, who is to be stationed at Soojahabad. At Lahore, the Council is said to be complete, Mr. Mansell having accepted the post offered to him. The different departments of the administration there had been arranged as follows :- City and Cantonment matters, Mr. L. Bowring; Judicial and Revenue, Mr. G. J. Christian; Military and Political, Major H. P. Burn; Treasury, Mr. H. Brereton.

It is stated that, on the 27th April, a moveable brigade had been ordered to hold itself in readiness to move at an hour's notice, and that forty rounds of ammunition had been served out to all the troops at Lahore. Nothing appears to have been known of the cause of these preparations.

The intelligence from Peshawur extends to the 23rd April. The heavy guns made their appearance on the 18th, and were to be put in position in the fort immediately.

"Peshawur," says a writer from thence, "is, I think, without exception, one of the finest towns I have ever seen in India. The streets are wide, and the houses extensive and lofty. On going into the main bazaar, the houses or shops are so built that a beautiful circle is formed in the centre, where one can promenade up and dawn when tired looking at the goods laid out for sale. Then there is a row of mulberry-trees in front of the shops, which sets them off to great advantage. In one of these circles nothing but silk is manufactured; in another silk and other cloths are sold; in another posteens, &c., everything appearing to go on with the utmost regularity."

Brigadier Penny's brigade reached the Bukrealla Pass on the 20th, and Jelum on the 23rd. Major Mackeson, accompanied by Lieut.-Colonel Steel and some other officers, had proceeded to Cashmere, on a mission, the object of which was unknown. Orders had been issued forbidding pucka building at Rawul Pindee. Hence it is inferred that that place was not to be a permanent station.

The party encamped on the plain of Jumrood, in the vicinity of the Khyber Pass, has had some slight affairs with Afreedee marauders, who were punished.

A Commission, consisting of Mr. C. G. Mansell, Mr. R. Montgomery, and Colonel Godby, had been appointed to try the ex-Dewan Moolraj. Complaints are made of the severe measure dealt out to this person in comparison with the treatment which Shere Sing and Chutter Sing have experienced, the latter of whom was guilty of the cold-blooded murder of Colonel Canara, an Irishman. A correspondent of the Englishman writes that he saw Moolraj in his confinement; "a spare man, rather above the middle height, with a longish black beard."

Some apprehensions are expressed respecting the safety of the celebrated diamond, Koh-i-Noor, which is said, in the Bombay papers, to have got into the clutches of Maharajah Golab Sing, at Jamoo. But a Calcutta paper quotes a private letter, in which the writer states that he had seen and handled this celebrated gem.

Accounts from Scinde announce the arrival of a confidential servant from the ex-Ameers with presents for the ladies of the zenana, who are to proceed to join their lords at Calcutta, after the monsoon.

From Hyderabad we hear that affairs are slowly, but steadily, being reformed under the guidance of the present minister, Shums-ool-Omrah; all old holders of office are being replaced by new ones; but it is impossible to say yet how far all these changes are likely to prove beneficial. The sahookars of the capital, or rather the party in the interest of Suraj-ool-Moolk, had executed their purpose of proceeding in a body to the Nizam's palace, to complain against the present minister.

The Governor of Bosnbay, Lord Falkland, was to proceed to Sattara on the 26th April, when measures would be taken for formally annexing that state to our dominions, and for adopting the new arrangements for its administration. Mr. Frere is to be appointed commissioner; his first assistant is to be a civilian (Mr. Coxon); Lieutenant Sandford, of the artillery, is to be second assistant; Ensign Nicholson, of the 23rd Native Infantry, the third.

Several deaths are reported in different parts of India, caused by lightning. Amongst the victims is a chief of a petty state, the Raja of Tipperah, Maha Raja Kistno Kissen Manick, who was struck dead by lightning on the 14th April:

an unusual fate for a sovereign, and in his case rendered more remarkable by his dread of such an end, which had induced him to construct a place of refuge for security in a thunderstorm!

The domestic intelligence from the presidencies comprises few topics inviting notice. The Governor-General and Lord Gough were at Simla. Sir C. Napier arrived at Madras on the 2nd May; he declined landing; and was to be at Calcutta by the 5th or 6th.

The accounts from China are not satisfactory. When Sir John Davis, in April, 1847, entered the Canton river, and was about to storm the city with a military force, an agreement was entered into by him with the imperial minister, Keying, the first article of which stipulated that, in two years from its date (the 6th April, 1847), "the city of Canton shall be opened to British subjects." The approach of the period was the signal for indications of an intention, on the part of the Chinese authorities, to recede from the engagement; negotiations were entered into, and at length the Imperial Commissioner, Seu, has communicated to Mr. Bonham the commands of the Emperor, that, as the people of Canton were averse to the entrance of foreigners into the city, "the Chinese Government cannot thwart the inclinations of its people, in order to comply with the wishes of strangers from afar." The Government of Hong-Kong had officially notified this breach of faith, which, however, it is said, Mr. Bonham has strict orders from home not to resent, and the right will not be enforced.

CASUALTIES BY DEATH IN THE ARMIES OF INDIA REPORTED SINCE OUR LAST PUBLICATION.

Bengal.—Major-General J. W. Fast, of the Bengal army, on board the Prince of Wales, on her passage from Calcutta, March 19. Lieutenant-General B. W. D. Sealy, Hon. E. I. Co.'s service, aged 67, June 21.

ANNEXATION OF THE PUNJAB.

Note, by Mr. Elliot, of a Conference with the Members of the Council of Regency, held at the Lahore Residency, on the 28th of March, 1849.

In obedience to instructions from the Governor-General, dated the 26th of March, I proceeded towards Lahore on the following day, and arrived on the 28th. Immediately on my arrival, I communicated to Sir H. M. Lawrence and Mr. J. Lawrence the instructions with which I was charged, and regretted to find that both those officers were fully persuaded that the Council of Regency would on no account be induced to accede to the terms which were to be offered for their acceptance, inasmuch as they had already incurred great odium amongst their countrymen for what were considered to be their former concessions. I, however, requested that the two most influential members of the Council might be at once summoned to a private conference at the Residency; and Raja Tej Sing and De-private conference at the Residency; and Raja Tej Sing and De-man Deena Nath were accordingly sent for. The Raja, at first, wan Deena Nath were accordingly sent for. excused himself, on the ground of sickness; and I should have, consequently, gone to his house, had I not been apprehensive that any exhibition of undue eagerness might have been interpreted into too great a desire to obtain his concurrence. It was then intimated to him that, as my mission was urgent, and could not be accomplished without him, he should come to the Residency, unless he really was seriously ill. Upon this, he came, his looks giving no warrant for his excuses; and was accompanied by Dewan Deena Nath.

After the first compliments had been exchanged, I explained to them the purpose for which I had come, that the Punjab would be annexed to the British dominions at all events, but that it was for them to decide whether this should be done in an unqualified manner, or whether they would subscribe to the conditions which I was about to lay before them. The R.ja, who was more than usually nervous and garrulous, opened out in a strain of invective against Raja Shere Sing and all the rebellious sirdars, who had brought the Council to this pass, acknowledged that the British Government had acquired a perfect right to dispose of the country as it saw fit, and recommended that it should declare its will, without calling upon the Council to sign any conditions. I replied that, if they refused to accept the terms which the Governor-General offered, the Maharajah and themselves would be entirely at his mercy, and I had no authority to say that they would be entitled to receive any allowance whatever. The Dewan, who was much more deliberate and reserved than his colleague, commented on the severity of the conditions, and particularly on the expatriation of the Raja; and, when I told him it was intended to exclude also the relatives of the Maharajah from the palace, in order that the citadel might be exclusively in British occupation, he remarked that, immediately they were relieved from the restraints which their present residence subjected them to, they would begin leading licentious lives, and bring scandal upon the memory of Runjeet Sing and his descendants.

After many inquiries from them about the distance to which the Maharajah was to be removed, I observed that his destination would not improbably be the Deccan; but, after they had requested a reconsideration, on account of the remoteness of that country, "where," said they, "God knows whether the people are Hindoos or Mahomedans," I promised that the Maharajah should not be sent anywhere to the east of the Ganges, pointing out Hurdwar, Gurhmuktesir, Bithoor, and Allahabad, as being all of them places of high sanctity in their religion. They seemed to be thankful for this as a concession. But they had no definite notion of the exact position of any of these places except Hurdwar. The Raja, indeed, was astonished to discover that Lahore was not so far from Allahabad as from Benares. They seemed fully satisfied with the personal allowance assigned to the Maharajah, which I told them would be about Rs. 10,000 per mensem.

Other subjects were then discussed; and they inquired anxiously about their own future position. I told them that it was not intended to deprive them of their jagheers or salaries, and that, for this indulgence, they would be expected to yield the British Government the benefit of their advice and assistance whenever they were called upon to do so; that, if they did not subscribe to the conditions, I could not promise that any consideration would be shown to them. The Dewan inquired, whether the jagheers would be continued to future generations. I replied, certainly not; unless the grants conveyed a perpetual title. and that would be left to the decision of the officers who would shortly be appointed to investigate the validity of all rentfree tenures.

After much more parley, during which, while I told them that they were at perfect liberty to decline, or to accede to, the conditions I had been instructed to lay before them, at the same time that I convinced them of my resolute determination to yield no point, they expressed their willingness to sign the paper, and signed it accordingly, not without evident sorrow and repugnance on the part of the Dewan.

Upon this I requested that Fakeer Nooroodeen and Bhaee Nidhan Sing, the only other members of the Regency resident at Lahore, might be sent for; and, upon informing them of what had passed, they said they would abide by whatever their colleagues were prepared to do. They then affixed their seals and signatures to the paper in duplicate, and Sir H. M. Lawrence and myself then added our counter-signatures. It was agreed that next morning a durbar should be held at seven o'clock, A.M., in order to promulgate the articles subscribed to, and obtain the Maharajah's ratification.

The members then took their leave, after the conference had lasted about two hours.

Report, by Mr. Elliot, of the Proceedings held at a Durbar, in the Palace of Lahore, on the 29th of March, 1849.

At the appointed hour, after the troops had been prepared against possible tumult, I proceeded to the durbar, accompanied by Sir H. M. Lawrence, R.C.B., and the gentlemen of the Residency, and escorted by a squadron of the body-guard, which Major Mayne had brought over, by forced marches, from Ferozepore. We were met by the Maharajah Duleep Sing, outside the gate of the citadel. After the usual salutations, and giving and taking of presents, we conducted the Maharajah to a seat at the end of the hall of audience, and took our places on either side of him. The Maharajah, who is endued with an intellisence beyond his years, and cannot be supposed to have been side of him. The Maharajah, who is endued with an intelli-gence beyond his years, and cannot be supposed to have been ignorant of the purpose for which the durbar was now convened, for the last time, conducted himself throughout with cheerfulness and self-composure.

The hall was filled with spectators, who ranged themselves on each side of the centre seats, the Europeans on the right, the I natives on the left. The latter were in such numbers as almost to give cause to apprehend that, with a view of courting popularity, the Council of Regency might refuse to abide by the terms which they had signed the evening before.

After we were seated, the following note, declaratory of the intentions of Government to assume the sovereignty of the Punjab, was read out in Persian, and afterwards translated into Hindoostanee, for the comprehension of every one present.

NOTE.

" For many years, while the wisdom of Maharajah Runjeet Sing ruled the people of the Punjab, friendship and unbroken peace prevailed between the British nation and the Sikhs. The British Government desired to maintain with the heirs of Runjeet Sing the same friendly relations they had held with him; but the sirdars and Sikh army, forgetful of the policy which the Maharajah's prudence had enjoined, and departing from the friendly example he had set, suddenly crossed the frontier, and, without any provocation, made war upon the British power. They were met by the British army-four times they were defeated-they were driven back with ignominy across the Sutlej, and pursued to the walls of Lahore.

"The Maharajah Duleep Sing tendered there, to the Governor-General of India, the submission of himself and his chiefs, and implored the clemency of the British Government. The Government of India had acquired, by its conquest, an absolute right to subvert the Government of the Sikhs, by which it had been so grossly injured. But, in that time of victory, it showed the sincerity of its declarations, and gave signal proof of the moderation and forbearance by which its policy was directed. The kingdom of the Punjab was spared; the Maharajah was placed on the throne of Runjeet Sing, and treaties of friendship were formed between the states.

" How have the obligations of these treaties been fulfilled? The British Government has, with scrupulous fidelity, observed every promise which was made, and has discharged every obligation which the treaties imposed upon it. It gave to the Mala-rajah the service of its troops. It afforded him the aid of its treasures in his difficulties. It meddled with none of the institutions or customs of the people. By its advice to the council, it improved the condition of the army; and it laboured to lessen the burdens and to promote the prosperity of every class of the Maharajah's people. It left nothing undone which it had promised to perform; it engaged in nothing from which it had pro-mised to abstain. But there is not one of the main provisions of those treaties which the Sikh Government and the Sikh people have not, on their part, faithlessly and flagrantly violated. They bound themselves to pay an annual subsidy of twenty-two laklis of rupees. No portion whatever has, at any time, been paid. The whole debt due by the state of Lahore has increased to more than fifty lakhs of rupees; and crores have been added by the charges of the present war. The control of the British Government, which the sirdars themselves invited, and to which they bound themselves to submit, has been rejected, and resisted by force. The peace and friendship, which were promised by the treaties, have been thrown saide. British officers, in the discharge of their duty, have treacherously been thrown into captivity, with women and children. Other British officers, when acting for the Maharajah's interests, were murdered by the Maharajah's servants, after having been deserted by the Maharajah's troops. Yet, for these things, the Government of Lahore nei-ther inflicted punishment on the offender, nor made reparation for the offence. It confessed itself unable to control its subjects. It formally declared to the British Resident that its troops would not obey its command, and would not act against the chief who had committed this outrage against the Government of India.

"Not only did the army of the state refuse thus to act, but it everywhere openly rose in arms against the British. The whole people of the Sikhs joined in its hostility. The high sirdars of the state have been its leaders: those of them who signed the treaties of peace were the most conspicuous in its ranks; and the chief by whom it was commanded, was a member of the council of regency itself. They proclaimed their purpose to be the extirpation of the British power, and the destruction of the British people; and they have struggled fiercely to effect it. But the Government of India has put forth the vast resources of The army of the Sikhs has been utterly discomfited; its power. their artillery has been captured; the allies they invited have been driven from the Punjab with shame; the Sikh sirdars, with their troops, have surrendered, and been disarmed; and the Punjab is occupied by the British troops

"The Government of India repeatedly declared that it desired no further conquest; and it gave to the Maharajah, by its acts, a proof of the sincerity of its declarations. The Government of India has sought and desires no conquest now. But, when unprovoked and costly war has again been wantonly renewed, the Government of India is bound, by its duty, to provide for its own security for the future, and to guard effectually the interests and tranquillity of its own people.

"Punishments and benefits alike have failed to remove the inveterate hostility of the Sikhs. Wherefore, the Governor-General, as the only effectual mode which now remains of preventing the recurrence of national outrage, and the renewal of perpetual wars, has resolved upon declaring the British sovereignty in the Punjab, and upon the entire subjection of the Sikh nation, whom their own rulers have long been unable to control, who are equally insensible to punishment or forbearance, and who, as past events have now shown, will never desist from war so long as they possess the power of an independent kingdom.

The Governor-General of India unfeignedly regrets that he should feel himself compelled to depose from his throne a descendant of Maharajah Runjeet Sing, while he is yet in his early youth. But the sovereign of every state is responsible for, and must be affected by, the acts of the people over whom he reigns.

As in the former war, the Maharajah, because of the lawless violence of his subjects, whom his Government was unable to control, was made to pay the penalty of their offence in the loss of his richest provinces, so must he now be involved in all the consequences of their further violence, and of the deep national injury they have again committed. When a renewal of formidable war by the army and the great body of the Sikhs has forced upon the Government of India the conviction that a continuance of Sikh dominion in the Punjab is incompatible with the security of the British territories, the Governor-General cannot permit that mere compassion for the prince should deter him from the adoption of such measures against the nation as alone can be effectual for the future maintenance of peace, and for protecting the interests of the British people."

Upon the conclusion of this manifesto, silence was observed for a few minutes; when Dewan Deena Nath observed, that the decision of the British Government was just, and should be obeyed; but he trusted that the Maharajah and servants of the state would receive consideration at the hands of the British Government, and that some allowance would be granted to maintain them in comfort and respectability. "If France," he observed, "after the defeat and captivity of Buonaparte, had been restored to its legitimate ruler, though the country yielded thirty crores of revenue, it would be no very extraordinary act of British clemency if the Punjab, which yielded less than three crores, should be restored to the Maharajah. However, let the Governor-General's will be done."

I replied, that the time of concession and clemency was gone; that I was ready, on the part of the Governor-General, to confirm the conditions to which the council had subscribed yesterday, and which should be read out in Persian and Hindoostanee, for general information.

This was listened to with the deepest attention, but it called forth no observation. To the former signatures were then added those of Gundur Sing, the accredited agent of Sirdar Shere Sing, Sindunwala, and Sirdar Lal Sing, agent and son of Sirdar Utter Sing, Kaleewala, thus completing the entire number of the members of the council of regency who have remained nominally faithful to their engagements. The paper was then handed in duplicate by Raja Tej Sing to the Maharajah, who immediately affixed his signature by tracing the initials of his name in English letters. The alscrity with which he took the papers when offered to him was a matter of remark to all, and suggested the idea that possibly he had been instructed by his advisers that any show of hesitation might lead to the substitution of terms less favourable than those which had been offered.

When the document had thus been fully ratified, I directed the following proclamation* to be read aloud in the native lan-

I then handed one copy of the terms to the Maharajah; and, having thus fulfilled the object of my mission, I took my leave with the usual etiquette, and dissolved the durbar.

The whole ceremony was conducted with grave decorum. No sirder was armed. The costly jewels and gaudy robes, so con-spicuous in the Sikh court on other public occasions, were now thrown aside. I did not observe the slightest sign of wonder, sorrow, anger, or even dissatisfaction, upon the countenance of any one present, except on that of Dewan Deena Nath; and, from the nice inquiries he had made, during the private conference, respecting his own interests, it would not be uncharitable to suppose that his sadness arose more from the loss of the immense influence he possesses in every department of the state, than from regret at the subversion of his master's dynasty. But neither did I observe any signs of gladness. The whole anbordering on apathy, and not a word or whisper escaped to betray the real feelings pervading the hearts of that solemn assembly, which had met to witness the ratified dissolution of the great empire established by the fraud and violence of Runjeet Sing.

nouncement appeared to be received with a degree of indifference

As I lest the Palace, I had the proud satisfaction of seeing the British colours hoisted on the citadel under a royal salute from our own artillery,-at once proclaiming the ascendancy of British rule, and sounding the knell of the Khalsa Raj.

THE PUNJAUB CONTINGENT.—The following letter from a trustworthy correspondent gives fuller explanation of the arrangements respecting the new levies, than anything we have as yet seen published:—" There are to be ten new regiments immediately raised in and for the Punjaub-a sort of contingent, in fact-five cavalry and five infantry-to be recruited half Sikhs, and the other half Poorbeas and Mussulmans. mandants and second in command are already appointed—the names of the following for the command of the cavalry corps :-1st. Neville Chamberlain, 16th gren., and Stannus, 5th cav. 2nd. Crauford Chamberlain, 28th N.I., and Brown, 46th N.I. 3rd. Biddulph, 45th N.I. with 3rd L.C., and Weston, 36th N.I. 4th. Dowson, 5th N.I. with 1lth L.C., and Henderson, 45th N.I. 5th. Fitzgerald, of Scinde camel corps, which is to be done away with. Second in command, I don't know. Infantry, 1st. Coke, 10th N.I., and Willan, 44th N.I. 2nd. Knox, 43rd L.I., and Brown, 46th N.I. 3rd. Morris, 20th N.I., and Reid, 34th N.I. 4th. Campbell, 30th N.I., and Gastrell, 13th N.I. 5th. Not yet known, I believe. The adjutants are all, it is said, to be taken from the Bombay and Madras services. You will perceive that the above list of commandants and second in command is nearly all selected from passed men. The order limiting absentees on staff employ to five must now be done away with, and will not increase the efficiency of the Bengal army certainly; but no increase to the regular army will be granted us now, I much fear."—Agra Messenger, April 21.

THE STATIONS OF MUKKOO AND BOODER PIND are abandoned.

PESHAWUR, April 15 .- The plain of Peshawur extends further than one can see; we cannot get a decent camp, and as the weather is intensely hot, the troops, at least the Europeans, are all to be put under cover-one regiment, the 60th, goes into Sultan Mahomed's garden-house, a large place outside the town, called Wuzeerabagh; the 61st go into Avitabile's house in the town, which will hold them all; and the Toughs are to live in tents chuppered over, and are, I think, the luckiest of the true Revolumbet to the second in all the second in al The two Bombay batteries are to be chuppered in also near the 60th; the two Bengal ones in the old Sikh lines, which are to be repaired. The native corps are not decided for yet: we had so many changes of engineers, &c. &c., that almost nothing is done yet. The whole plain is under water by irrigation, but the crops are getting ripe. The weather is yet cold at times.

COAL.-The late Mr. Williams, in his recent survey of the Ranee-gunge mines, suggested the probability, from the appearance of the Ranee-gunge out-crop (which till lately had not been distinctly defined), that a third bed or main coal would be found at the depth of from 450 to 500 feet. His suggestions were acted on, and an experimental shaft sunk to the south of the out-crops of the present known seams. It has proved successful; a seam of coal has been discovered at the depth of 480 feet, the thickness is not ascertained, but is supposed to be from 8 to Il feet. There is now little doubt that the Indian market will (as soon as powerful machinery can be procured) be supplied with fuel equal to the best English, the produce of her own mines. Mr. Simms, on visiting the mines, significantly pointed downwards; he will be glad to hear that the hint was taken, and success attended it.—Englishman, April 26.

MILITARY, April.—The 9th N.I. were to march with treasure from Lahore to Wuzeerabad on the 16th, and on the return of that corps to Lahore, the 18th, 37th, and 72nd regts. will be permitted to march for their respective stations. The 2nd Europeans, and 30th and 36th N.I. are expected at Lahore about the 2nd of May. The 30th will pass through Delhi on their way to Meerut, which station they may reach about the first week in June. The 2nd regt. of irreg. cav. were to leave Hoosheearpore on the 18th for their new station of Deenanuggur. The 73rd N.I. and 6th L.C., with the captured and surrendered guns, expect to reach Umballah about the 28th. The 3rd N. I., at present at Battala, between Deenanuggur and Umritser, are expected at Hoosheearpoor about the end of this month. A wing of a native infantry corps is always to garrison the fortress of Kangra, and the 28th regt. have been directed to increase the detachment, they have hitherto furnished from Hoosheearpoor, to the above strength. H. M.'s 14th Light Dragoons, and Holmes's irreg. cav. (12th) reached Rawul Pindee on the 13th. Brig. Penny was one march in the rear of these two corps with the 2nd Europeans and 13th and 20th N.I. H.M.'s 32nd foot, and the 49th and 51st regiments, arrived at Umrister on the 13th. The European corps marched onwards (to Jullunder) on the 12th; the native regiments proceeded in the same direction (the 49th to Nakodah) on the 14th, as it was found inconvenient to take so large a body of troops through the The head-quarters of the 3rd brigade horse country together. artillery, Capt. Huish's troop, and Lieut.-col. Campbell's ditto, arrived at Umballah on the 18th, none the worse for their march. A detachment of Capt. Huish's troop, under Lieut. Bruce, had gone towards the hills with the camp of the Commander-in-Chief, in charge of two guns intended for the Governor-General, and two more guns had been brought on by Capt. Huish, which Lord Gough has, it is said, reserved for himself. Two more have, we are told, been presented by the Governor-General to the regiment of artillery, and will be placed as well-earned trophies of Goojrat in the regimental mess-house at Dum-Dum. The 45th N.I. arrived at Umballah on the 21st. The Commander-in-Chief left the regiment at Munnimagra, and proceeded on his way to Simls. H.M.'s 32nd foot, and 51st N.I., marched into cantonments, at Jullunder, on the morning of the 18th. General Gilbert was at Pukka Serai on the 13th. The 36th N. I. arrived at Umballah on the 19th, and proceeded on towards Moradabad the following day.

THE SIKH ARMY. — If anything were wanting to show the character of the Sikhs, and of the war, the manner of its termination must resolve all doubts. We have had no Guerilla warfare, as the English papersanticipated - no desperate struggles of fanatic Akalies. We have but had a regular army meeting us in fair struggle on a fair field. The morale of that army is destroyed by defeat, and we hear no more of it. The soldiers had little personal connection with the chiefs, and had they been desperate men they might have continued a very harassing contest. But no-they are no desperadoes-they are comfortable people, accustomed to serve Runjeet Sing on daily rations and monthly pay. They have wives and children, and lands, and cattle at home, and they have no taste for starving in the desert in the Ogre-like hope of one day drinking the blood of a Feringhee. They have little nationality—merely the natural love of domination—but they like the good things of domination—not the life of a dog in the wilderness and failing the former alternative, they are quite prepared to return to their homes and stay there. Hence their readiness to lay down their arms at the suggestion of their officers. You may be sure that the last eight months of scanty or no pay-little to eat—and much to do and suffer—has thoroughly cured them of all martial ardour. They like a Guerilla warfare about as much as a London guardsman would like bush fighting among the They have abundance of pluck and courage-but it is a calculating courage—and deprived of a nucleus you will never hear more of them.—Mofussilite, April 6.

Scientific Mission to Tiber.—The Delhi Gazette gives us the following notice regarding the scientific mission sent into Tibet by the Governor-General:—"Capt. A. Cunningham has long since returned to the Provinces, Dr. Thomson came to Lahore with Dewan Joalla Sahai, between two and three months ago, laden with the botanical riches of Kashmeer, and Lieut. Henry Strachey, now the only remaining member of the com-mission, was at Le, in Ladakh, about the middle of January."

English Law in India.—A curious instance of the operation of the system of English law is afforded by the Indian. A large amount of assets had been placed in the Bank Times. of Bengal to the account of Charles J. Richards, T. S. Kelsall, and John Cochrane, as assignees for Mesers, Hughesdop, Bro-Mr. Richards has gone to England, but appointed Mr. Kelsall to act for him. The Bank, however, refused to allow the money to be withdrawn without the signature of Mr. Richards, as no assignee has the right to transfer his powers. The Supreme Court was, therefore, moved to vest the funds in the names of Messrs. Kelsall and Cochrane, but this Sir L. Peel declared himself unable to do, as he could not deprive Mr. Richards of his share in the arrangement, and passed an order transferring the whole to Mr. J. Cochrane in his capacity of official assignee.

SUPERINTENDENT OF POLICE.—It is said that the appointment of superintendent of police has been conditionally conferred on

Mr. Law, subject to confirmation.

GENERAL REMARKS.

CALCUTTA, MAY 1.—In the Import market a good business has CALCUTTA, MAY 1.—In the Import market a good business has been done, although some descriptions of goods have deteriorated in value. All kinds of Manchester goods inquired for, and Glasgow fabrics a shade better. Twist dull, with a tendency to lower prices. With the exception of Spelter, which had fallen to 8-10 to 8-12, Metals are rather better. We may quote Iron, Flat, &c., at 2-14 to 3, Nail Rod 3-14, Round Rod 5, Hoop 5-12 to 6, Sheet 5 to 5-2; Copper, 39-4 Sheathing, 37-8 to 39 Brazier, 33-12 Tile, 34 Nails.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE BENTINCE (steamer), with the London mail of March 24, reached Madras May 2, and left on the same day for Calcutta.

SURGEON DE BURGH BIRCH, M.D., is about to retire from the service; this will promote Asst. Surgeon C. Paterson, M.D., to the rank of Surgeon.-Athenaum.

THE KHOND AGENCY.—We rejoice to hear that the result of the first season of exertions by the present agency in Chinna Kimedy has been the rescue of 206 victims, and that since Col. Campbell has been in office, the total number rescued has not fallen short of 547. The last expedition has lain through the most difficult and savage part of the Khond country; yet the mission met with no opposition, and no injury of any kind was inflicted on man or on property. The march was unopposed and triumphant.—Friend of India, April 5.

CONVERSIONS.—The Roman Catholic priests of Royapooram are labouring with great success in their vocation. Another of the Free Church scholars, a youth named Thomas, has embraced the Popish faith, and is now studying under the care of the Rev. Dr. Murphy. These frequent secessions indicate the existence of an intense activity, which must be met by corresponding energy on the part of the teachers of the Protestant fails, if they would not see the fruits of their labours snatched from them. The fact must be a source of discomfort to the earnest ministers of the Free Church, but it is no reflection on their zeal and piety.—Athenæum, April 24.

The Christian Knowledge Society at Madras.—The Madras Athenæum has brought to our notice the fact that the Christian Knowledge Society at that Presidency has been in the funds en habit of making rather an unscrupulous use of the funds en-trusted to them by the public, and with which they have estabtrusted to them by the public, and with which they have established a press. They have, it appears, unceremoniously reprinted two little works compiled by the editor of this journal, for the use of youth in India. As we have no recollection of ever having given them permission so to do, the transaction is with-The works had not, at the time of their unauthoout excuse. rized republication, been registered according to Act XX., 1847, and there was, therefore, no invasion of copyright which might subject the publishers to the legal penalties of that enactment; but a body like the Christian Knowledge Society, which exists for the sole purpose of disseminating the purer principles of Christian morality in this heathen land, is bound to teach as much by example as by precept. We acquit the Society of any mercenary motive in this transaction. Their object was doubtmercenary motive in this transaction. Their object was doubt-less laudable—the diffusion of useful knowledge, but the means they adopt should be made to correspond with the excellence of the object in view. It is a very insufficient excuse for poaching in the manor of another, that the game is to be given to the poor. We are confident, however, that the present remonstrance will, of itself, be sufficient to prevent the recurrence of any such attempt, even if it was not supported by the information we now give the Society, that these works were duly registered, with two others, in the Home Department on the 27th of the past month, and that the republication of them will hereafter entail penal consequences.—Friend of India.

Major Onslow. - It is with extreme regret we announce the death of Major George Walton Onslow, of the Madras artillery, brigadier commanding the Ellichpore division of the Nizam's army, which melancholy event was occasioned by a fall from his horse while engaged in a skirmish, on the 30th ultimo, with some Rohilla insurgents near the village of Kullum. Major Onslow entered the Madras army as a cadet in 1821, and obtained his majority on the 13th July, 1845. He was universally beloved, and his death, as a matter of course, is deeply regretted by all serving under him.

THE H. C.'S STEAMER "TENASSERIM" came in on Saturday afternoon, bringing a detachment of H. M.'s 25th or King's Own Border from Calcutta to rejoin the head-quarters of their corps. The detachment consists of Captain Holt, commanding; Lieuts. Briscoe, Bloomfield, and Arnold, and Ensign Brady, with 256 rank and file, two women, and three children. The de-tachment had two casualties during the passage—one private by cholera, and the other by diarrhoes. - United Service Gazette, May 1.

INDIAN NAVY.-It is said that Mr. Kingcombe, an Acting Master of the Indian Navy, who, it will be remembered, formerly held command of the steamer Medusa, is shortly expected from the Indus Flotilla to resume charge of that vessel. During his former command, in the time of Sir R. Oliver, a considerable noise was made, and we think with great justice, that an Acting Master should hold charge of a steam vessel on a salary of Rs. 250 a month, while there were many unemployed Lieutenants enjoying the magnificent allowance of Rs. 145!—Bombay

THE HEAD-QUARTERS OF H. M.'s 83RD FOOT proceeded to Panwell on the 10th May, en route for Poona. The detachment of H. M.'s 64th foot (two companies) reached Khandalla all well on the morning of the 9th, and halted there the following day.

"SAGAGHUD," OR MAHABULESHWUR THE LESS. - This "Ocean Fort" (for such is the import of its name) lies about six miles inland of Alibag. It is reached by ascending a small ghat, somewhat steep, but not of any length. The altitude of the fort may be computed, in round numbers, at 1,600 feet. The difference of climate between it and the plain averages perhaps somewhat about ten degrees. There are many nice strolls about the place, and various points of interest in connexion with its grand and majestic scenery to attract and delight the observer. A commanding view of the districts of Poenar and Peim, with the Nagotna river meandering between them, is obtained on the north and east side. The island of Caranjah seems close at hand, on the extreme left. Bombay itself appears in the dis-tance, and Malabar Hill is discernible also. The brother islands, Henery and Kenery, lie on the bosom of the ocean like two plots of sward. Rewerdunda and its river running to Roha Ushtumee is also well defined. Indeed, every object, whether hill or dale, sea or inland creek, presents itself to the eye of the beholder in clear and well-defined reality. Nature has thrown some heaps of rocks together in fantastic forms, in some places giving a picturesque appearance to the pile exceedingly fanciful. Several sides of the old fort are awfully precipitous, and make a large demand on the nervous system when too closely approached. The undulating plains below, with their patches of cultivation, intersected by various rivulets, and dotted by clusters of villages extending in all directions to a considerable distance, stand in beautiful contrast with the surrounding hills, and the higher range of mountains behind them, well wooded and presenting every shade of colour, form a scene of enchanting beauty, and give one's spirits a buoyancy and joyousness which are never felt elsewhere. spot is altogether a delightful one. The air is cool and balmy, and it certainly seems to be a matter of marvel that, considering its close proximity to Bombay, " Sagaghud" should be so little resorted to. There are at present but two houses standing,but many others could be easily run up, at a very trifling cost. To such of the denizens of the presidency whose time or purse will not admit of a visit to the greater, "Mahabuleshwur the less"—for such it certainly deserves to be named — offers a very satisfactory substitute, especially to the invalid.—Bombay

OPENING OF CANTON.

The following is a copy of Seu's despatch to the British Plenipotentiary:

At 12 noon on the 31st March, I had the honour respectfully to receive the following commands from the emperor relative to the conference we had concerning the opening of the city, and about which I had despatched a memorial by an extraordinary express:

"Walled cities are erected with the view of protecting the people, and by protecting the people only can the country be preserved. And that to which the hearts of the people incline is the will of heaven. Now, since the people of Kwangtung are all of one fixed opinion, in being averse to the entrance of foreigners into the city, shall we circulate and post up a luminous proclamation transcribed on yellow paper, constraining them to the opposite course? The Chinese government cannot thwart the inclinations of its people in order to comply with the wishes of strangers from a far; and foreign governments ought also to pay attention to the feeling of our people, and spare the powers of merchants. † You ought still more rigorously to guard against native banditti and prevent them from availing themselves of the opportunity for creating disturbances and throwing the inhabitants into a state of disorder; and as the foreign merchants who come from a great distance across the vast ocean undoubtedly desire to live in tranquillity and take delight in their occupations, you ought, therefore, to render them also protection in the same manner. Thus all will for ever act in harmony and enjoy universal tranquillity.- Respect this.

"You will perceive from the foregoing that the language I held during the personal conference I had with you was not based on an obstinate adherence to my own views, but that the Imperial rescript which I have received from a distance also corresponds with the view of the public. For this reason I send you a communication, and at the same time take the opportunity of wishing you happiness and tranquillity.

"A necessary communication."
On the 4th of April the following was circulated in Canton: "Government Notification. - The Chinese government having declined to carry into effect the stipulations entered into between Her Majesty's late Plenipotentiary and Keying, the late Imperial High Commissioner, by which it was agreed that the city of Canton should be open to British subjects on the 6th instant, the same is hereby notified for general information, and Her Majesty's Plenipotentiary, &c. &c., directs that no British subjects shall for the present attempt to enter the city."

The Friend of China observes:—" The agreement of April 6, 1847, has thus been dishonoured. The indignity is no doubt commanders, and the feeling is common to us. It is understood that stringent orders were received from home last month not to enforce the right of entry. Had these instructions been forwarded a few months earlier, we would have been in a less humiliating position. Being uncertain as to the wishes of Her Majesty's government, and possibly feeling the necessity of carrying the city question by arms, if necessary, a strong naval force was collected in the vicinity of Canton, and we assumed a decidedly warlike attitude. Our position is thus more unpleasant. The Chinese naturally suppose that we attempted to bully them, and no earthly means, short of a severe castigation, will ever disabuse them of this belief. Two years ago, we entered the river, and seized their forts when they were unprepared for us. This act they avenged by the butchery of six Englishmen at Hwang-chu-kee, and by various other aggressions. They now say, 'We were prepared for you-our forts mannedour militia raised; further, we have dishonoured your country in the face of the world, and you did not dare to resent the insult.' But enough of this painful subject; we must wait patiently to hear how the iutelligence is received in England. In the whole dusky picture there is only one clear spot—no one attaches blame to either plenipotentiary, admiral, or general."

On the 3rd of March the guilds (i. e. mer cantile corporations, dealing in certain commodities) issued a proclamation, prohibiting purchases from foreigners till the city question was settled. This was in force until the 10th April, when dealers were again permitted to purchase. Notwithstanding the prohibition, a highly respectable man, who had long dealt with foreigners, named Shing-Lee, purchased some bales of cotton yarn by auction; for the doing which he was seized, carried into the city, by order of the magistrates, put to the torture, and it is feared either decapitated or died in prison from the barbarous treatment he received.

"Chops" were circulated, in the city and vicinity, from various towns and from the soldiery, breathing hatred and de-fiance towards the "rebel barbarians."

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE PEKIN (steamer), with the London mail of February 24, reached Hong-Kong April 17.

DR. BOWRING AND MR. ELMSLIE. - By the last mail steamer (previous to April 5), Dr. Bowring arrived at Hong-Kong, and was in May to assume his duties as British consul at Canton. The local press speaks with satisfaction of Dr. Bowring's appointment, but at the same time compliments Mr. Elmslie, exconsul, on the abilities he evinced during his temporary exercise of that office.

CHANGES IN THE COURTS OF LAW .- It were desirable that the public gave more attention to the changes taking place in the courts of law than is usually given to Hong-Kong legislation by British subjects resident in China. These changes deeply affect the interests of every Englishman whether resident in the colony or at the consular ports. The ordinance establishing a court of petty session was published in draft on the 25th January, and with some unimportant alterations passed the Legislative Council on the 22nd February. Three months are usually allowed to intervene between making public contemplated acts of council and finally passing them into law. It is to be apprehended that the encroachment which has already been made upon the criminal jurisdiction of the Supreme Court-by which and the contemplated change—by which actions for debt or damages when the sum involved does not exceed five hundred dollars, are to be decided summarily without a jury,—are but introductory to a proposition to sweep away the Supreme Court entirely, and in its place build up a despotic judicatory under the control of the Local Government of Hong-Kong. We hear it is in contemplation to amalgamate the appointments of judge and attorney-general, or law adviser of the executive, prosecutions being handed over to an attorney, who will be appointed crown solicitor on a small salary. The judge will thus form part and parcel of the executive. As law adviser, he will raise prosecutions, upon which he will afterwards decide in his character of chief justice! It is within these few years that trial by jury was established at the Cape of Good Hope, and to the present day the courts differ from those of England. In the Mauritius and at Ceylon the courts are more or less of a French or Dutch character; at Singapore they are Anglo-Indian; had Manila remained in our possession, they would have been Spanish; but in Hongkong they are—and long may they remain—English.—Abridged from the Friend of China.

Native Restrictions on Commerce.—A case of cruelty has been perpetrated, it is supposed, upon a dealer, Shing Leé, of the Mew-Hing firm, who bought a parcel of cotton yarn at auction, in the belief that the combination was illegal and that they dare not carry out their threats against the buyers. He was arrested and taken to prison and put several times to the torture, not (of course) for buying the foreign yarn, but upon some old charge of having had gunpowder on his premises, or of having sold gunpowder to foreigners. The effect of his punishment has been fully shown, for of the many who previously laughed at the threats of the Consoo or Guilds, not one could afterwards be found to bid for foreign goods at the time, and not one at this time will dare venture on a purchase at public auction. might be written on the disappearance of several well known and intelligent Chinese lately doing business with foreigners, under a belief that some false charge might be brought against them in case they displeased the government (or the Guilds), also regarding the seizure in the night by regular government officers of the two Chinese employed in the consul's office, who, it is said, were examined and re-examined with a view to involving them in a charge of giving information to foreigners, &c., and detained some days.

Imperial edicts are addressed directly to the people in this manner. (Note

A writer in the Chinese Repository for September last, in an account of a visit to the city of Shang-hai and its environs, describes various classes of the beggars, who, it appears, form no inconsiderable proportion of the population. The time was the month of January, the dead of winter.

One specimen of the mendicant tribe,-a stout, able-bodied fellow of twenty-five, -had a bowl, filled to the brim with water, fastened to a cord, by which he kept it in constant motion, whirling it round and round; sometimes making his neck the axle, he wound the cord round it until the bowl almost reached his chin, and then in an instant whirled it back again, without disturbing the water. Next came an "imperial beggar," so called because he wore a mock imperial dress,—a yellow tunic, with an inscription upon it, before and behind, "given by impe-'-and a cap surmounted by a gold button. In one hand he carried a long staff, like a shepherd's crook; in the other, a small basket, which he thrust in the face of passengers and shopkeepers for alms. He was an able-bodied man of about sixty. Then appeared a pair of beggars,—strong, healthy men, of thirty years of age,—having bamboos in their hands with which they kept up a deafening clatter, whilst singing in chorus. The next object was a priest of the Taou sect, on a begging tour, for aid to the building or repair of a temple. He was a man of about forty, well clad, and of respectable appearance. He carried in his hand a subscription-book, which he held open as he kneeled humbly on the threshold of a door, detailing the claims of the object, and the spiritual and temporal benefits which contributors would secure by their charity. A Buddhist beggar appeared to be demented; he was meanly clad, and filthy in his person, and employed silly tricks to attract children, pre-tending they were charms. The two next specimens were a dead beggar and a drunken one: the former lay on his back near a temple, killed by excess in opium; the other was wallowing in the mire, but still calling for strong drink.

Besides these examples, the visitor encountered several companies of old women, looking like Gypsies, with children at their backs; men lying by the wayside, counterfeiting the agonies of death; veteran couples, man and wife, arm in arm, and young children, whose faces were covered with the pustules of the small-pox, or (as the author was told) skilful imitations of

"In more than one instance," adds the author, "I have seen these beggars habiting themselves for their begging tours; they usually live in dilapidated temples, under broken walls, in old boats, or wretched hovels, men, women, and children herding together like beasts. Their filthy and tattered garments are so put on as to make them appear the most piteous objects, leaving their bodies half-naked, and sometimes their faces are besmeared with blood."

PERSIA.

Letters from Tabriz, of the 5th May, announce a fact of some portance. The diplomatic relations between the representaimportance. tive of the French Republic and the Persian Government have been broken off. M. de Sartiges demanded his passports, and, after having placed the French residents in Persia under British protection, left Teheran for Tabriz, where he was expected to arrive on the 6th. It was thought that he would thence proceed to Trebizonde, to wait for fresh instructions from his Government. The cause of this rupture was the refusal of the Persian Cabinet to ratify the treaty of commerce which was concluded at Paris, two years since, between the French Minister of Foreign Affairs and Mirza Mehemet Ali Khan, the Persian Ambassador, who, on leaving that capital, brought with him the ratification of the French Government.—Journ. de Constantinople, May 19.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

At the monthly meeting of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, on the 19th April, a memorandum on some Buddhist excavations near Kurar, with plans and drawings, by Mr. H. B. E. Frere, resident at Sattara, was read.

These excavations or caves are situated on the skirts of the hill of Agasew, so named from a temple to Mahadeo on its summit; it is the last of the range which, running off from the main ghauts near, forms the southern boundary of the valley of the Koina, till that river unites with the Krishna at Kurar. The hill is about two miles from Kurar. Some of the caves are much scattered; but to facilitate description Mr. Frere has divided them into three series, in the order he visited them. 1st. That which overlooks the valley Jaccunwarree. Here the caves generally face the south, and are the furthest from Kurar. This is the largest and most important series. 2nd. The caves in the valley between the two spurs (described in the paper); they are few and scattered. 3rd. The caves overlooking the valley of the Koina and Kurar—they generally face the north.

According to the villagers, these caves had not been examined by Europeans before. Mr. Frere and his party visited them on the 19th January last. Several devotees now reside in them; they are excavated out of a soft pinkish amygdaloid, and are for the most part unornamented and without inscriptions. In the lst series are enumerated twenty-three caves and cells, of which the principal are the 5th and 6th, the former called Chundr Soorya-Che-Warree, and the latter Wittoba-Che-Warree. Both of these are dagope caves; the dagope in the latter is 21 feet in circumference, and has in front of it an image of Wittoba. In the 2nd series are included seven caves; they are just below the temple of Mahadeo, at the head of a valley between that of Jaccunwarree and the Koina. These were but partially examined by Mr. Frere. In the 3rd series, which is in the Koina valley, at the end of the spur which overlooks Kurar, there are sixteen No. 37 of this series is stated to be a range of cares, in the central one of which is a dagope 21 feet in circumference, and to the right of it the remains of a group of figures. Below this is another range (No. 36), at the entrance to the principal cell of which, in a kind of anti-chamber, are two recesses, one on each side, and on the backs of these recesses are traces of inscriptions—the sole remains of the kind observed in the caves.

Mr. Frere concludes his memorandum (which is accompanied by plans and drawings of the caves, dagopes, groups of figures, &c., and a fac-simile of the remains of the inscriptions), by observing, that a more careful examination of the mountain in which these caves are situated would probably bring to light many more which are not enumerated in this paper; and that a more scrutinizing survey of those which he had visited than he had then time to make would be likely to lead to the discovery of many more objects worthy of note. There is an extreme simplicity of style in the architecture of the caves throughout, and a general absence of all attempts at adornment, as well as of any human or other image in the places usually appropriated to the object of worship. No traces of plaster or fresco paintings were observed.

At the monthly meeting of the Bombay Geographical Society, on the 19th April, the following paper was read, being an extract from a letter from Lieut. F. E. Manners, commanding the Hon. Company's brig Tigris, to Capt. William Lowe, senior naval officer at Aden, dated the 26th February, 1849:—

" In the interim proceeded with the Hon. Company's brigantine Tigris, under my command, down Ansley Bay, and from thence, with some of the officers of the vessel, to the interior, about fifteen miles (inhabited by the Sahoo tribes), in order to examine and report upon the extensive ruins of the ancient Grecian city of Adoulis, and if possible to obtain inscriptions. With regard to the latter, I have been altogether unsuccessful, but received positive intelligence that inscriptions are in the possession of the natives, and, I believe, had I felt myself justified in detaining the Tigris for about a fortnight, I should have been enabled to have given very important information respecting the remains of a city which has hardly been visited by any European, and also obtained inscriptions. With regard to the appearance of the ruins generally, they occupy an extent of ground of about fifteen miles in circumference, and are composed principally of confused heaps of stones of various kinds, with great quantities of large blocks of marble. The tombs are in an excellent state of preservation. The natives are exceedingly jealous of their being visited, and we were forced to return twice on that account. They are a race of people by no means to be trusted, and I believe it was owing y to our having fire-arms, together with a large party, that kept them at all in order. The wall of the city is in good preservation, built without the use of mortar, and large enough on its top for a vehicle to be driven. It is composed of various kinds of stone, principally granite, interspersed here and there with marble, and extended from where we were some distance up the mountains; and it is a place, in my opinion, of considerable importance, and ought to be thoroughly explored, as the history of the city of Adoulis is but little known."

It was stated to the meeting, that instructions had been sent to make a minute examination of the locality.

Mr. J. R. Logan, in a pleasant paper, entitled, "Five Days in Naning," published in the Journal of the Indian Archipelago for January, has announced a new and extraordinary use to which the bambu is applied by the Malays:—

"On our right there was a succession of neat cottages, amongst coco-nut trees, forming the village of Kadang. On nearing one of these, our ears were saluted by the most melodious sounds, some soft and liquid, like flute notes, and others deep and full, like the tones of an organ. These sounds were sometimes low, interrupted, or even single, and presently they would swell into a grand burst of mingled melody. I can hardly express the feelings of astonishment with which I paused to listen and look for the source of music so wild and ravishing in such a spot. seemed to proceed from a clump of trees at a little distance, but I could neither see musician nor instrument; and the sounds varied so much in their strength, that their origin seemed now at one place and now at another, as if they sometimes came from mid-air, and sometimes swelled up from the mass of dark foliage, or hovered, faint and fitful, around it. On drawing near to the clump, my companions pointed out a slender bambu, which rose above the branches, and whence they said the musical tones issued. I was more bewildered than before; but they proceeded to explain that the bambu was perforated, and that the breeze called forth all the sounds. Every one knows the multiplied uses of the bambu; how, entire or split, as the purpose requires, it forms posts, masts, yards, ladders, chairs, stools, screens, floors, roofs, bridges, &c.; how, when smaller, it is an elastic material out of which a great variety of baskets and receptacles are formed for containing solids; and how its joints make neat and convenient bottles for holding and carrying liquids, or, when fine, are fashioned into flutes. But here was the crowning triumph of the Malayan art, and the most wonderful of all the applications of the bambu, for what could be more bold and ingenious than the idea of converting an entire bambu, rough from the jungle and thirty or forty feet in length, into a musical instrument, by simply cutting a few holes in it? I had an opportunity afterwards of getting possession of one of these bulu ribut, or bulu perindu (storm or plaintive bambu). As we proceeded, and when the notes had died away in the distance of the second of th tance, our ears were suddenly penetrated by a crash of grand and thrilling tones, which seemed to grow out of the air around, instead of pursuing us. A brisk breeze which soon followed, and imparted animation to the dark and heavy leaves of the gomuti palms, explained the mystery, while it prolonged the powerful swell. As we went on our way, the sounds decreased in strength, and gradually became faint; but it was not till we had left the bambu of the wind far behind us, and long hidden by intervening trees and cottages, that we ceased to hear it.

"Marsden, in his dictionary, voce depublish, explains buluh perindu to be 'a species of bambu, supposed to yield a melodious and plaintive sound; a sort of Eolian pipe, formed by cutting a slit in a bambu fixed perpendicularly, and exposed to the action of the wind.' It would appear from this, that the plaintive bambu is used in Sumatra. All those which I saw in Rambau and Naning had a slit in each joint above a certain height, so that one bambu possessed fourteen to twenty notes, each of which varied in itself according to the strength of the breeze. The joints decrease in their bore from the bottom to the top, and the slits also differ in their size and shape."

Mr. Freiderich, in his "Researches in Bali," published in the Journal of the Indian Archipelago, for February, gives a curious account of Bali literature. Speaking of epic poetry, he mentions the Ramayana. "This," he says, "is the oldest Indian epos, composed by Walmiki, who is also in Pali acknowledged as the author of it. Here, however, exists a Javanese elaboration by M'poe Raja Kusuma, also called Jogiswara, or prince of the penitents, father of M'poe (Hempu) Tanakung, and of another poet, M'pu D'Armaja, composer of the Smaradahana. The language is a pure Kawi, with a peculiarly large number of Sanskrit words. The Indian Ramayana contains seven kandas, large divisions, again divided into chapters. In Bali we find no kandas; but the whole narrative of the first kandas is placed together, and divided into twenty-five sargas. The seventh, the Uttara kanda, is no part of the narrative, but forms a separate work in Bali, the author of which, however, is accounted to be the same Walmiki. The separation of this kanda from the rest of the Ramayana is a proof that it was introduced from India as a different piece, not forming part of the large work, in favour of which position the contents also speak, the Uttara kanda giving an account of the history of the family of Rama after his death. From this we conclude that in India, at the period when the Ramayana was communicated to the Javanese, the Uttara kanda was not yet annexed to this work. We likewise do not find again in the Java-Balinese Ramayana the long stories of Bala kanda, the history of Rama as a child, where Wasista, the priest of the house, tells him tales of the time of old. These narratives, partly very beautiful,such as that of the Sagarides, and the descent of the rivergoddess Ganga on the earth,—are episodes, not forming part of the Ramayana. They have, however, so many charms, especially for a people like the Javanese and Balinese, who take every story for truth, that the absence of those tales in the Java-Balinese Ramayana is surprising. We ascribe the absence of those tales to the same reasons as the separation of the Uttara kanda from the Ramayana. At the time when the Ramayana found its way into Java, it was in India not yet so voluminous as at present, and comprised exclusively the history of Rama.'

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

MONDAY, June 25, 1849.

AMONGST the papers just laid before Parliament, by command of Her Majesty, relating to the Punjab, is a despatch from the Governor-General to the Secret Committee, dated so late as the 7th April, which enters very fully into the history of the war, and into the reasons which have dictated the policy pursued by Lord Dalhousie in deposing the Maharajah of Lahore, and annexing the Punjab to the British dominions.

This important state-paper, though necessarily long, is perspicuous in its narrative, succinct in its arguments, and simple in its style, presenting a contrast, in all these respects, to the general class of Indian documents.

The Governor-General observes, in the outset, that the question of the future relations of the Punjab with the British empire in India had formed, during the whole progress of the war, the constant subject of his anxious consideration. When, upon the first outbreak at Mooltan, in April, 1848, the Resident at Lahore called upon the Durbar to take measures for punishing those who had committed so gross an outrage against the British Government, the Sirdars, after a long consultation, informed him that their troops, and especially the regular army, could not be depended upon, and would not obey their orders to march against Moolraj. The Resident, thereupon, suggested to the Commander-in-Chief the importance of commencing military operations against Mooltan immediately; but Lord Gough replied that operations at that time would be "uncertain, if not impracticable," and gave his decided opinion against the movement, in which the Resident concurred; and the Governor-General in Council, after full deliberation, confirmed the decision. The reasons of this determination are set forth at some length.

The question, his Lordship observes, was difficult and perplexing. On the one hand, if there had existed in the minds of the people a desire to rise against the British power, delay might encourage and spread that desire; on the other hand, extended military operations at such a season would endanger the health and very existence of European troops, who would have had to carry on the siege of a formidable fortress in the worst district of India, and a failure of the operations through such a cause would have given greater impulse to risings than their postponement. "It was a choice of difficulties,—an alternative of evils; and the Government of India selected that which appeared to be the lesser evil of the two:" that course being in accordance with the opinions of the highest military authorities in India and in England, as well as of the home Indian Government. The worst that can be alleged against the delay is, that it precipitated the crisis, which, sooner or later, must have taken place.

His Lordship then relates the detection of the attempts to seduce our sepoys at Lahore; the complicity of the Maharanee in these intrigues; the rising of Bhae Maharaj Sing in the Reechna Doab, and the operations of Major Edwardes, whose gallantry and energy, aided by the Bhawulpore troops, restricted the outbreak at Mooltan to the limits of the province.

At this juncture, the Resident at Lahore directed the movement of a British force, with a siege train, to reduce Mooltan, and the Governor-General, "on receiving intelligence of the order having been publicly issued," confirmed it, and operations against the city commenced. The narrative then relates the defection of Sirdar Chutter Sing and his troops in Hazara; that of Shere Sing, at Mooltan; the junction with him of all the troops of the State from across the Indus; the union with Chutter Sing at Peshawur of the rest of the Sikh army, the disbanded soldiers and the people from the Manjha, and the appearance of proclamations calling upon all to make war upon the British.

This crisis was one, Lord Dalhousie says, which, he was convinced, required the exertion of all our resources, the Sikh army being strong in numbers, and especially in artillery, and we had had experience of their courage and skill. The result has shown that his estimate of their power was not fallacious. The preparations of the Indian Government were upon an extensive scale, and, before Christmas, there was assembled in the Punjab an army of 38,000 effective men, with 170 pieces of artillery.

After tracing the events of the campaign, the Governor-General describes the position in which the British Government and the Sikh nation stood towards each other at its close. The former had rigidly observed the obligations imposed by the Treaty of Lahore and the Agreement of Bhyrowal; whereas, on the part of the Sikhs, every one of the main provisions of the contract had been evaded or violated. Of the subsidy of twenty-two lakhs per annum, stipulated to be paid for the aid of British troops, not a rupee had been received; even the loans advanced by the British Government to discharge the arrears of the discarded troops had not been repaid, and the debt of the State of Lahore to the British Government exceeds fifty lakhs. The directing and controlling authority of the British Resident at Lahore, recognized by the Treaty, was disregarded; and ultimately "nearly all the army of the state, joined by the whole Sikh people throughout the land, as one man, rose in arms against us, and carried on a ferocious war, for the proclaimed purpose of destroying our power and exterminating our race."

Admitting that these have been merely the acts of a law-less soldiery, against the will, and in spite of the opposition, of the sirdars, what justification, Lord Dalhousie asks, does this furnish for them, or what security does it afford us? Our objects are peace; a friendly and well-governed neighbour in the Punjab; a frontier which does not demand a perpetual garrison of 50,000 men. If the council and sirdars cannot control their army, of what value to us, as a state, is their impotent fidelity? But the fact is otherwise. The sirdars who signed the treaty, even members of the Council of Regency, have been the leaders of the mutinous troops and the rebellious people, and the Regency, during the troubles, gave no effective assistance to the British Government.

The Governor-General presses, and very properly, the important fact, that the rising in the Punjab was not against the Maharajah; on the contrary, the Sikhs have constantly professed their fidelity to him, proclaiming that it was against the British alone that the war was directed. That the destruction of the British power, and the expulsion of the British themselves, were the real objects of the war, was avowed by the Sikhs in their letters and proclamations. A proclamation of Shere Sing expressly declares that the object of the insurrection was, on the part of Maharajah Dhuleep Sing, "to eradicate and expel all the tyrannous and crafty Feringees;" and enjoins the people of the Punjab to "murder all the Feringees wherever they can find them." The bitterness of their enmity to the British induced the Sikhs to court the alliance of the Affghans; they invited Dost Mahomed Khan, promising him the province of Peshawur,-a possession which the Sikhs valued beyond all price, having gained it with the best blood of their race. The object of securing Affghan co-operation against the British tempted the Sikhs to forget their strongest national animosity, and in their eyes compensated for Mahomedan insults to their religion.

"Such," observes Lord Dalhousie, "have been the acts of faithlessness and violence by which the Sikh nation has, a second time, forced upon us the evils of a costly and bloody war. If the grossest violation of treaties,—if repeated aggression, by which its national security is threatened, and the interests of its people are sacrificed,—can ever confer upon a nation the right of bringing into necessary subjection the power that has so injured it, and is ready to injure it again, then has the British Government now acquired an absolute and undoubted right to dispose, as it will, of the Punjab, which it has conquered. The British Government has acquired the right, and, in my judgment, that right must now be fully exercised. I hold that it is no longer open to this Government to determine the question of the future relations of the Punjab with British India by considerations of what is desirable or convenient, or even expedient. I hold that the course of recent events has rendered the question one of national safety, and that regard for the security of our own territories, and the interests of our own subjects, must compel us, in self-defence, to relinquish the policy which would maintain the independence of the Sikh nation in the Punjab."

He proceeds to argue, that experience has shown that a strong Hindu government, capable of controlling its army and governing its own subjects, cannot be formed in the Punjab; that the materials for it do not exist, and if they did, the object for which such a government was desired by us would not thereby be accomplished, namely, the existence of a friendly power upon our frontier, which would be a barrier and defence to us. It was hoped that motives of prudence and self-interest might counteract the feelings of hatred to us on the part of the Sikhs on political and religious grounds; but events proved that this hope must be abandoned. "There never will be peace in the Punjab, so long as its people are allowed to retain the means and the opportunity of making war; there never can be now any guarantee for the tranquillity of India, until we shall have effected the entire subjection of the Sikh people, and destroyed their power as an independent nation."

The Governor-General then shows that any policy short of this,-such as the maintaining the pageant of a throne, and really governing the country by a British functionary, thereby keeping up a mockery of independence,-would neither be advantageous to our interests nor creditable to our name, whilst it would serve as a nucleus for constant intrigue. From the doctrine, that the present dynasty in the Punjab cannot, with justice, be subverted, since Dhuleep Sing, being a minor, can hardly be held responsible for the acts of his nation, he entirely dissents,—as untenable in principle, and as having been heretofore disregarded in practice, even in the case of Dhuleep Sing himself, in 1845, when he was made to pay the penalty of the past offences of his people, and, on being duly warned that he would be held responsible for their future acts, he gave this reply: "If, in consequence of the recurrence of misrule in my government, the peace of the British frontier be disturbed, I should be held responsible for the same." Lamenting the necessity of deposing a successor of Runjeet Sing, Lord Dalhousie declares that he cannot permit himself to be turned aside from his duty to millions of British subjects by a feeling of misplaced and ill-timed compassion for the fate of a child.

He then sums up the arguments upon the question. Having a second time been involved in war with the most formidable enemy we have ever encountered in India, joined by the Ameer of Cabul, as the apostle of Islam, who made a direct appeal to Mahomedan India; having met and crushed this danger; if we do not hold as our own every foot of Sikh territory, and deprive that people at once of power and existence as a nation; if concession or compromise be made, we shall be considered throughout India as having been worsted in the struggle. Moderation, though wise and politic before, would be feebleness now; hesitation would be regarded not as magnanimity but as pusillanimity, and attributed not to forbearance but to fear; it would encourage dormant hopes of restored supremacy in British India; it would insure the certainty of a renewal of the struggle, and hasten the time when the British power in India might, perhaps, be contested on other fields than those of the Punjab.

The possession of this territory he regards as not seriously difficult for us to maintain, or financially unprofitable. A large portion of the inhabitants, especially the Mahomedans, will hail the change; the Sikhs, warlike, turbulent, and brave, are not more so than the people of Rohilcund once were. Disturbances and outbreaks may be expected; but there is no reason why a rule of justice, combined with vigour, should not make the Sikhs as harmless as the Rohillas.

The financial branch of the question Lord Dalhousie treats of in general terms. The revenues, he observes, are very considerable in the aggregate, and a large amount, which has been diverted from the public treasury in jagheers, will be recovered by the confiscation of those of the rebellious chiefs. The province of Mooltan will materially add to the revenue, which will be further augmented by developing the resources of a rich and productive soil. In short, his Lordship has no hesitation in expressing a confident belief, as the result of the examination he has made, "that the Punjab will, at no distant time, be not only a secure, but a profitable, possession."

In conclusion, he says: "While deeply sensible of the responsibility I have assumed, I have an undoubting conviction of the expediency, the justice, and the necessity, of my act. What I have done I have done with a clear conscience, and in the honest belief that it was imperatively demanded of me by my duty to the State."

No one will dissent from this conclusion, and very few will dispute the strength of the reasoning upon which it is founded. With this remark, we dismiss the subject for the present: we may recur to it hereafter.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

Sir,-The disposal of Indian patronage becomes a subject of ever-increasing interest as the time for the renewal or modification of the East-India Company's Charter draws near. Such cases as that of Mr. Moore, lately brought before the public, in the form of a criminal prosecution, may suffice to show that the functionaries of the British Government are not more careful than individual Directors in the discharge of the responsibility which even now devolves upon them as patrons, and may lead us to infer that they are hardly likely to be more careful were all the military and civil appointments of the Indian empire vested permanently in their hands. Singularly few are the instances which have occurred of anything like malversation, or even carelessness, on the part of Directors, in the disposal of their immense patronage. They have exercised it for the most part rather as trustees for the Proprietors of India-stock, and through them for the country at large, than for their own interest or that of their own immediate circle of acquaintance. No favour has ever been shown in the admission of candidates either at Haileybury or Addiscombe. Directors' sons or nephews are as often rejected, in the preliminary examinations, as any other youths, and are found as frequently in the infantry as in the more privileged corps of artillery or engineers, to which nothing but superior merit can secure admission. This is as it should be, and shows that the Government has done well in leaving so large a portion of the patronage of the Indo-British empire in the hands of so high-minded a body of gentlemen as the Directors of the East-India Company are acknowledged to be.

Extensive as is the circle over which the benefits of Indian patronage are usually extended, it excites more than ordinary pleasure when any of the Directors go beyond that circle, and endeavour to secure for the Indian service officers of superior talent, by exciting the young men of some particular school, of whose goodness they are satisfied, to contend for the glorious prize of an Indian commission. More than once has a Haileybury appointment been offered for competition at Eton and at Rugby. At Kensington School, which has long been known as one of the nurseries of the Indian military and civil services, Sir Henry Willock has in successive years offered no less than eight Addiscombe appointments, and has had the gratification of seeing as many of the successful competitors as have yet finished their course at the military seminary gazetted as engineers. At Cheltenham, also, it appears that Sir James Lushington has followed the example set by Sir Henry Willock, and that the competition has been followed by similar happy results. There are other instances* of which the public ought to hear, that honour may be given where honour is justly due. For certainly no method could be adopted by the possessors of Indian patronage which could better insure for the Indian service the appointment of really talented officers. It would be well if a certain number of appointments could be offered every year by the whole body of Directors for similar competition in our public or proprietary schools. It might be difficult at first to select the particular establishments which should thus be favoured, but such a point as that will be left to the united wisdom of the Court of Directors. Even if this good result should never be attained,-and I am hardly sanguine enough to hope it yet,the mere mention of such remarkable instances as I have just brought forward may serve to stimulate other members of the Court to follow the good example so nobly set.

I am, Sir, &c. &c.

LAW.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, JUNE 8.

The Queen v. Kendall and others. - The defendants, among whom was George Bickley, an attorney of this Court, had been tried and committed upon an indictment which charged them with a misdemeanour, in conspiring to negotiate for the sale of a cadetship in the service of the East-India Company. Subsequently a rule was granted for a new trial, so far as George Bickley was concerned, upon an affidavit made by that defendant, in which he stated that he had been taken by surprise by the evidence given by one of the witnesses, William Moore, who was, in fact, one of the defendants on the record, but on the morning of the trial he retracted his plea, and pleaded guilty, and was then put into the box as a witness for the prosecution, and proved the case on the part of the Crown. The defendant further stated that, if he had been aware of the nature of the evidence which the witness Moore gave, he could have been prepared with witnesses to prove that it was false in some particu-He also complained that all the witnesses whose names were on the back of the bill were not called by the Crown, and especially that Lady Ripon, through whom the nomination had been obtained, was not in attendance. He alleged that he was not aware that any corrupt agreement had been entered into for the sale of the nomination, but that he supposed the money which had been advanced was merely by way of loan, and that he had acted in the manner merely as the legal adviser and attorney of one of the parties, Mrs. Binckes.

The Attorney General, Sir F. Thesiger, Sir F. Kelly, Mr. Wigram, Q.C., Mr. Clarkson, Mr. Peacock, and Mr. Forsyth now showed cause against the rule, which was supported by Mr. Scrjeant Shee and Mr. Lush.

Lord Denman said, there was no reason for saying that the defendant had been taken by surprise. He was mixed up with all the parties in both the transactions comprehended in the indictment, and must have expected that all the evidence which might throw any light upon the question at issue would be laid before the jury. He had complained that all the persons whose names were on the back of the bill were not called as witnesses at the trial-why, then, did he not complain of that at the time? If he had done so, they would have been at once put into the box to be cross-examined. It was to be regretted that Lady Ripon was not present, but it was proved that she was unable to attend through ill health, and that if she had done so it might have affected her personal safety. It did not appear that if Lady Ripon had attended she could have given any material evidence; but if the defendant thought her a necessary witness, he ought to have subprenaed her. As to the statement that the defendant thought the money was being advanced on loan, it was quite impossible to suppose that that was the real nature of the case, when the whole transaction and the evidence of Moore were looked at. That witness was undoubtedly an accomplice, and his evidence required confirmation; but he (Lord Denman) had remarked upon that to the jury, and had told them that the witness Moore appeared to have acted without a due regard to honour and rectitude. The jury, however, looking at all the facts, had believed all that the witness stated on his oath, as he (Lord Denman) did now; and the result showed that a man's companions in guilt might discover his crime, and so bring him to condign punishment. It would have been better if the counsel for the prosecution had given the defendant's counsel a copy of Moore's examination at the East-India House, in order that they might see whether they could answer it; but though that had not been done, the verdict was perfectly satisfactory, and the Court would not disturb it. The rule for a new trial must therefore be discharged.

JUNE 12.

The same. - The defendants, Richard Creed Kendall, Maria Binckes, Violet Linley, and George Bickley, an attorney of this Court, had been convicted some time since on an indictment which charged them with a misdemeanor in regard to the sale of a cadetship in the service of the East-India Company.

The several defendants, with the exception of William Moore, who had pleaded guilty, and had been put into the box as a witness for the Crown, were this day brought up to receive the judgment of the Court.

Mr. Serjeant Shec, who appeared for Mr. Bickley, said that as the Court had refused to grant a new trial, the defendant had no course but to submit himself to the merciful consideration of the Court. The defendant Bickley had not received money as a bribe to do what was wrong, though after the wrong had been done he had received compensation for services previously rendered. He trusted, therefore, that the defendant's honourable character in his profession for twenty years would induce the Court to think that his offence would be sufficiently visited by a pecuniary fine, without inflicting any personal or professional penalty, which would prove his ruin.

Mr. M. Chambers, Q.C., for Mrs. Linley, called the attention of the Court to the circumstance that she was the mother of several children, a separation from whom would be not only extremely painful to her, but injurious to their comfort and wel-The only offence of Mrs. Linley was that she had received some money for procuring the return to Mr. Moore of the 1,000l., which in the first instance he had paid for the purpose of obtaining a cadetship.

Mrs. Binckes and Mr. Kendall, who had no counsel, declined addressing the Court.

The Attorney-General then addressed the Court in aggravation, and said that all the parties appeared to have been perfectly aware of the nature of the offence which they were committing. The money obtained from Mr. Moore appeared to have been divided among those parties, with the exception of Mr. Bickley, to whom none was traced. There could, however, be no doubt that he was perfectly aware of the nature of the transaction, for he had endeavoured to cover the transfer of the money under the colour of a loan. With these remarks, he would leave the case in the hands of the Court.

The defendants having been called to take their places on the floor of the Court,

Mr. Justice Patteson delivered judgment. His Lordship commented on several circumstances proved at the trial, which in the opinion of the Court established the guilt of the defendants, and then sentenced Kendall, who had received the 1,000L, to be imprisoned in the Queen's Prison for one year, and to pay a fine of 1,000%, and to be further imprisoned till the fine be paid. His Lordship sentenced Mrs. Binckes to be imprisoned for one year, and Mrs. Linley for six calendar months, in the Queen's Prison. The sentence of the Court on Mr. Bickley was, that he be imprisoned in the Queen's Prison for the term of one year, but no fine was imposed.

All the defendants were ordered to be imprisoned among the prisoners of the first class.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, JUNE 13.

In the Bankruptcy of --- Charretie. - The bankrupt, who applied for his certificate, is under sentence of imprisonment pronounced by the Court of Queen's Bench for the sale of a cadetship in the East-India Company's service. The private debts are not large, but the liabilities are enormous. lowing are the main items of the balance-sheet. Creditors holding security, 1,991l.; ditto, unsecured, 200l.; liabilities, 80,090L; pension received from the East-India Company, 300l.; legacy, 100l.; profits, 1,595l.; capital, 8,502l. The assets consist of property, 321l.; ditto in the hands of creditors, 400l.; debts, 2,000l. The losses are set down at 9,617l.; and the expenses at 401/.

Mr. Lawrance appeared for the assignees, and, on their behalf, declined to accept of any portion of the bankrupt's pension, a proposal which had been suggested at a previous meeting. The learned gentleman offered no opposition.

Certificate granted.

MILITARY SEMINARY, ADDISCOMBE.

The half-yearly public examination was held, with the usual formalities, at the East-India Company's Military Seminary, on the 8th inst., in the presence of the Chairman, Major-gen. Sir Archibald Galloway, K.C.B.; the Deputy-Chairman, John Shepherd, Esq.; several members of the Hon. Court of Directors, and the following visitors, to whom, by the Chairman's orders, cards of invitation had been given, viz.—Lieut.-generals Sir Howard Douglas, Bart., G.C.B.; Sir Thomas Downman, Comm. In presenting which, the Chairman and gold medal. In presenting which, the Chairman said, "that the Pollock Medal was struck in commemoration of the eminent services of Major-gen. Sir George Pollock, G.C.B., an officer of the Indian army, and who was once a cadet, as he, Mr. Montgomerie, then was. The re-conquest of Cabul was, indeed, an achievement worthy of being commemorated, and this medal had been presented by the inhabitants of Calcutta to this institution, in testimony of the distinguished services of Sir George Pollock on that occasion, and as a reward the most suitable for superior merit in him to whom it had been adjudged by the Lieut.-Governor and Public Examiner, as being the first scholar and the most exemplary soldier in the establishment. He was happy to have that opportunity of presenting a gentleman, who had so distinguished himself, to his gallant friend and comrade, Sir George Pollock, who had honoured them with his presence that day. He had the further pleasure of presenting Mr. Montgomerie, in the name of the Court of Directors, with that sword ,as a prize won by his exem-

The examinations commenced, at 11 o'clock, in MATHEMATICS, in which important branch of study the class acquitted themselves most creditably. At l o'clock, the Cadets were mustered for dinner, and after despatching their roast beef and plum pudding in about ten minutes, they were marched to the Coldstream, where some pontoon experiments were performed. Three light infantry bridges had been previously thrown across the piece of water; and, in addition to them, the bridge squad quickly formed a barrel bridge in a most workmanlike manner. crossing the bridge several times in slow and quick march, a field-piece was passed over, and the Cadets afterwards marched in Indian file over the lighter bridges. A submarine charge of 20 lbs. of gunpowder was next exploded by means of the voltaic battery. This experiment had a most interesting appearance, as a large column of water was raised to a height considerably above the tops of the lofty trees surrounding the spot, but in its descent it gave a thorough drenching to a numerous body of spectators, who were crowded along one of the banks.

The examination in Practical Fortification was then proceeded with in a portion of the grounds where models, most ingeniously constructed of sand, had been prepared, of a fortified dwelling-house and premises, a sunken battery, a raised battery, a double sap, and a tower on the novel principle suggested by Capt. Bainbridge, R. E. These models were explained by Cadets G. Martin, Ogilvie, Murray, Fitzgerald, and Maynard. The Chairman and visitors next proceeded to the sand-modelling hall, where a beautiful model of the town, fort, and citadel of Moultan, had been prepared. The model was on the scale of one-eighth of an inch to a foot, and represented the fortress at the moment of the last successful assault. It was designed by Lieut. Cook, R. N. (professor of fortification), and the Cadets, from plans and drawings made on the spot by Lieut. Oliphant, and was ably illustrated, and the various events of the siege explained, by Cadets Hughes, Donaldson, Blagrave, Ryves, and Lucas.

The Chairman and Directors afterwards returned to the examination hall, when the examination in Theoretical Fortification was commenced. The answering throughout was most satisfactory, and elicited the marked approbation of all the military authorities present.

Landscape Department.—Many excellent drawings of landscapes, &c., in water colours, were shown; several of which, from their freshness of colour and precision in execution, reflect the highest credit on the Gentlemen Cadets whose names they bear. The most prominent were those by Gentlemen Cadets L. Donaldson (to whom the first prize was awarded), E. R. Blagrave, T. Montgomerie, T. E. Hughes, S. P. Græme, H. Murray, &c.; all belonging to the first class. The prize for the best drawing in the second class was given to Gentleman Cadet M. James; but several were very little inferior, as those by Gentleman Cadets E. Tierney, G. Craster, W. Trevor, A. Lindsay, and J. Mayne.

The Lithographic specimens were, as usual, very satisfactory.

After the reports of the Public Examiner and the Lieut.-Governor had been read by Mr. T. R. Clarke, the Chairman proceeded as follows:—

"Gentlemen Cadets,-From the deep interest which the Court of Directors have invariably taken in the prosperity of the institution, you may easily believe it had given them high satisfaction to find, from the reports of the Lieut.-Governor and the Public Examiner, that your conduct throughout the term just closed has been such as to call for their entire approbation. the name, therefore, of the Court of Directors, it is my pleasing duty to express to the Lieut .- Governor, the Public Examiner, the professors and officers of this institution, the cordial thanks of the Court for the eminently successful manner in which they have discharged their important and laborious duties. And to you, my young friends, no less cordially do I express the satisfaction with which I and my colleagues have observed your diligent application to your studies, and the gentlemanly and soldier-like manner in which you have conformed to the discipline of the institution. As was to be expected, your progress has kept pace with your diligence; and I am happy to find that thirty-eight young officers have been declared qualified to join the army. Of those, six have attained the standard fixed for the Engineers, and seventeen for Artillery appointments. men, those of you who have been selected for the Engineers will proceed to Chatham, there more practically to prosecute your studies under one of the most distinguished officers of her Majesty's army,—Sir F. Smith,—when you will have to compete with young gentlemen of your own age, trained at other institu-tions for her Majesty's service. You will find in them generous and gentlemanly competitors; and I am sure you will show towards them that gentlemanly and generous feeling, which will evince to your respected commander that you are rivals in no-thing save in obedience to his orders, and in an ardent desire to acquire a knowledge of those scientific and practical attainments which shall fit you to take your place in one of the most accomplished corps of any army,—the Engineers of the army of India. Whilst at Chatham, besides prosecuting your military course, I would strongly recommend you anxiously to turn your minds to that branch of the profession of an engineer which is termed civil engineering. This will fit you for carrying out the designs which the Government of India entertain for the benefit of that country, by constructing works of public utility,—as roads, bridges, canals, embankments, railways. The steamer by water, and the railway by land, comprise within themselves almost the whole circle of civil engineering. But let me strongly recommend you to pay attention to structures and machinery, not only as a whole, but to every individual part, and the material and the mode of its formation, exercising your minds in overcoming, by anticipation, all manner of engineering difficulties; for to me, to have genius to contrive, and to execute with the means at his command, would be the test of the accomplished engineer. knew a man,—the late Major Presgrave,—who, in one of the wildest spots of Central India, built a bridge,—an iron suspeasion bridge,—over a torrent, I think, 220 feet span, and 12 feet broad; a most beautiful structure, and the first suspension bridge ever seen in India. He had no iron but what he dug in ore from the bowels of the earth; no coal to smelt but what he cut down and charred in the forest; and no workmen but those he found in that remote region and instructed; and yet he produced that beautiful structure. I mention this to you, gentlemen, to show what energetic genius is capable of performing. For the honour of that distinguished corps to which you are about to belong, let me earnestly urge you to study your profes-sion. Remember Moultan, and forget not the high efforts and scientific and practical engineering which there enabled the engineers to render such service to their country. You, gentlemen, who have been selected for the Artillery, think not that yours is a less important arm of the service. You must not only know artillery duties, but you cannot be good officers of artillery without being also practically good military engineers. It is the chief object of the engineer to select and to prepare positions for your guns; but the chances of war may take them from you. Are you then to say, I cannot construct a battery—I cannot advance an approach—I cannot cross a ditch, in the face of the enemy? This is the duty of the engineer, not mine! you have to acquire a knowledge of every branch of the ordnance department,-nay, of the entire equipment of an army,-for the arsenals and magazines which contain the munitions of war are usually placed under officers of artillery. In India we cast all our field-guns, we manufacture all our gunpowder, we construct all our gun-carriages; so that you will, no doubt, be ambitious to make yourselves acquainted with this branch of your professional duties. For the importance of your arm of the service, witness Moultan,—a great fortress,—one week setting at defiance an army of 20,000 men, formidable in its strength and in its defenders; the next, its guns silenced, its defenders subdued, itself a mass of ruins. It was the artillery that did this. In the short space of a few days, about 40,000 shot and shell, from heavy ordnance, were fired at this great siege. Witness, also, the field of Goojerat. That was mainly an artillery battle. In-deed, it was a battle which combined the use of every arm in the most beautiful order; and thus it has demonstrated, more than had ever been done before, the terrible efficiency of the Indian army. I know of no instance in modern war, except in the Indian army, in which the 18-pounders were used as field-guns. To you, gentlemen, who are to join the Infantry branch of the service, do not imagine, because you have not been selected for the Engineers or the Artillery, that therefore you do not require to prosecute your studies; on the contrary, an accomplished Infantry officer ought to possess a competent practical knowledge both of engineering and artillery. Suppose you come to have the com-mand of a force on service, and you fail, because you relied on your engineer, and were misled, or misapplied your artillery. would this excuse you? Would your ignorance save you? No. Then, my young friends, learn your duty in time; and when you come to practise it, no emergency will find you unprepared. say also to you, look at the field of Goojerat: that was a battle worthy of being studied by every officer. There every officer knew his duty, and performed it. There was no confusion. Every man in his proper place saw every comrade, right and left, in theirs, and he confidently advanced, certain of victory. tlemen, you are all now going to quit this institution for a time, -some of you for ever. I trust you will do so with a lively sense of its extreme value. You have had the means of acquiring that scientific and even practical knowledge of military duty which, with due cultivation, will make you accomplished officers. We have ample proof of this in the many distinguished men who, having sat on the benches you now occupy, have filled, and now fill, the ranks of the Indian army. I rejoice to tell you, my young friends, that of the honoured list transmitted by Lord Gough for promotion or henours, on whom her most gracious Majesty has bestowed or intends to bestow promotion and honour for their success during the last campaign, no less than forty-six had been educated at this College. And I am happy to have the honour of receiving here, this day, a distinguished officer of her Majesty's service, Lieut.-Gen. Sir Howard Douglas, who once filled the chair of our no less distinguished Public Examiner, Sir C. Pasley, and who contributed so much to add to the military character and the scientific acquirements of the Indian army. Let me entreat you, then, my young friends, those of you who, having gladdened the hearts of your families by the steadiness of your past conduct, will return here—do so with a firm determination to profit by the advantages which this noble institution affords you. Besides entire devotion to your studies, pay strict attention to the discipline of the College. Obedience is the first duty of a soldier,—the first principle of military organization. Obedience is discipline; without habitual discipline an officer is a nuisance to an army; an army itself is a vulgar, a dangerous rabble. To you, gentlemen, who have finished your course of study here-you are going now, or shortly, to enter upon real life. You are to join the army of The achievements of that army fill the history of our country and astonish the world! It has won for the arms of England imperishable honour. It has added a magnificent empire, and now another kingdom, to the British Crown. your hands, my young friends, young as you are now, will one day be committed the honour of that army! To you, gentlemen, and to your contemporaries, will be assigned the preservation of its glory and the continuance of its renown. How is this to be achieved? I will tell you. It is by the self-devotion, the untiring energy, the spotless honour, the daring courage, of its British officers. It is by commanding the confidence, by winning the affections, of their men, that they have secured from the native army the same self-devotion, the same daring courage; and it is thus they have led them to incessant victory. The Indian army has been formed on the best model of the army of England. To that illustrious army the army of India is indebted, not only for an example of high military discipline, but for sharing with it the brunt of its greatest battles. an army as I have described, not far from 300,000 strong, and with boundless resources, where is there an enemy that can for a moment stand against us? But, gentlemen, before you are capable of performing your military duty, you must become acquainted with the language of those you are to command. This is so obviously indispensable, that I will not waste time in further impressing it upon you. To your men you must be not only ther impressing it upon you. To your men you must be not only the officer, but the friend. They will look up to you as such. They will tell you their wants,—their village grievances, perhaps,—and you will listen to them, and assist them in obtaining redress. You must know them, and call them by their names. And be assured, if, by these and suchlike kind though not familiar manners, you gain the attachment of your men, they will liar manners, you gain the attachment of your men, they will amply repay your kindness by their devotion to your commands. An army thus officered, thus united, could never be overthrown. With respect to your deportment towards the natives generally, I would strongly recommend to you the greatest forbearance. Let not any awkwardness on their part, or misunderstanding on your own, ruffle your temper towards them. You will thus be amply repaid by their attachment and by your own comfort. I have never known a man habitually ill-tempered to the natives rise to eminence in the service. There is pered to the natives rise to eminence in the service. another subject to which I must also seriously call your attention; and that is, economy in your expenditure. I most earnestly warn you, gentlemen, against getting into debt; for, from the moment a man involves himself in pecuniary difficulties, from that moment he is a slave. My young friends, as you prize that manly feeling of independence which enables us to aspire to high station, scrupulously avoid pecuniary embarrassment. And now, gentlemen, let me say a few words to you more. Besides being good soldiers, you must be good men. The character of 'an officer and a gentleman' is, by statute, the character of the British army. No man who cannot stand that test can remain in it. But you have a duty to perform first of all—your duty to your Creator! Let me beseech you, my young friends, do not neglect this. Commit yourself habitually to His protection; He will strengthen your arm in the hour of danger; and, should trouble overtake you, He will be your comforter. Farewell, my young friends; may the blessing of the Almighty rest upon you."

The cadets, after going through the usual movements, were put through a bayonet exercise, in which Mr. Angelo has recently instructed them, and its utility in every respect was fully appreciated by every person present, particularly the Queen's and Indian officers, who expressed much surprise at its not being in general practice throughout the military service. The sword exercise followed, and both were performed with a spirit and energy which showed that the cadets felt a confidence in the use of the weapons with which they were armed.

The proceedings of the day were terminated, at 5 o'clock, by a banquet of cold viands of the most  $recherch\acute{e}$  character, to which all the principal visitors had been invited.

Owing partly to the extreme fineness of the day, the attendance on the part of the public was much larger than on most previous occasions. The recent termination of the last glorious campaign in the Punjab, no doubt, also contributed to the fedat of the proceedings on this occasion, from the former connection of so many of the heroes in the late Indian war with this establishment,—a connection, of the extent of which some idea may be formed from the remarkable fact, that in the list of promotions and honours contained in the last Gazette, there are no less than forty-six former cadets of Addiscombe.

EAST INDIA HOUSE.

A Quarterly General Court of Proprietors of East-India Stock was held on the 20th June; Major-General Sir A. Galloway, K.C.B., chairman of the Court of Directors, in the chair.

The Chairman. - I have to lay before the Court papers relating to the transactions in the Punjab from the year 1847, in continuation to the year 1849, which have been laid before Parliament by command of her Majesty. I have also to acquaint the Court, that the warrants for the payment of the half-yearly dividends in the Company's stock will be ready for delivery on the 6th of July next.

The secretary read the names of members of the committee on by-laws proposed to be re-elected for the ensuing year.

Mr. P. Gordon suggested whether it would not be desirable to revert to the old custom of electing the committee by ballot. The Chairman proposed the names of the committee, all of which were agreed to.

The Chairman then called upon Mr. Lewin.

Mr. Sullivan.-I am anxious to say a word or two on the bylaws, and the occasion appears to me to be very à propos. want to draw the attention of the Court to the proceedings that occurred during the ballot at the last General Court.

The Chairman. - I beg to state that the notice of motion by Mr. Lewin, and which has been advertised, must have precedence of all other questions. With respect to that motion I think it my duty to state, that a motion of a similar kind was made by the same hon, member on a former occasion, when it was not entertained by the Court.

Mr. Lewin.—I was—(order, order.) Mr. Clarke.—I rise to order. We We should like to hear what you, Sir, have to state.

The Chairman.—The Court is aware that a motion similar to that of which notice has been given by the hon. proprietor was brought on by himself on a former occasion, and that the Court refused to listen to it; thinking, I have no doubt, that it was a subject which ought to be left in the hands of the executive. call the attention of the Court to that particular circumstance; and, having done so, I leave the subject in their hands.

Mr. Lewin. - I beg to say that it is not my intention to speak upon the motion to-day, but to defer it to the next Court, in consequence of further documents being necessary. It only remains for the Court of Directors to add to the papers to which my notice refers the case which has been sent from Madras, and laid before the law officers by the late Chairman. I have not the least doubt that, as a fraud, was practised upon the sepoys at Madras, a similar fraud has been practised upon this Court in the case which has been sent home and laid before the law officers here, and that upon a false case a false judgment had been passed.

The Chairman.—The hon. proprietor, having stated that he would withdraw his motion, is not entitled to speak upon that motion now.

SATTARA.

Mr. Sullivan .- Sir, the third paragraph of your despatch of the 24th of January, 1819, on the Sattara question, runs thus: "The late Raja died without issue;" and in the 9th paragraph it is said, "all claims of collaterals being excluded by the fact that none of them are descended from the person in whose favour the principality was created, the ex-Raja Pertaub Shean, it follows that the territory of Sattara has lapsed, by failure of heirs, to the power which bestowed it." I wish to ask whether the Court has received any information of the death of the eldest legitimate daughter of Pertaub Sing?

The Chairman. - We have received no information of the

Mr. Sullivan.-I find by a speech made by Sir John C. Hobhouse, in the House of Commons, in August, 1848, that the eldest legitimate daughter of Pertaub Sing, with her children, is actually at Sattara, on a pension of 2.000l. a-year. Now, unless there is evidence of her death, I think the Court of Directors will, upon their own showing, be in a dilemma, because this eldest daughter of Pertaub Sing is the niece and heir of the late Raja Appa Sahib, and the ground on which the Company bad seized this territory was that there was no collateral heir of Appa Sahib, and it appears from this statement that there is. If this person should be living, the Court would be in a dilemma; and what is to be done?

The Chairman. - I don't suppose the Court would be disposed to entertain another discussion upon this subject.

Mr. Sullivan. - I only want to know what is to be done. It is for me to determine whether there shall be any further discussion upon the subject.

The Chairman.-If you will give it in writing it shall be attended to.

Mr. Sullivan .- So I will.

THE LATE BALLOT.

Mr. Sullivan.-1 was proceeding on the subject of the ballot. It will be in the recollection of the Court, that, after a very searching and elaborate examination of the most important question, considering the consequences involved in it, that ever came before the Court, and just as we were going to the vote, an hon. director opposite (Mr. Mills) started up, and, anxious that we should have the most intelligent decision upon it, declared that he thought the best way of deciding the question was, not to leave it to the votes of those who had attended to the discussion, not to be decided by the great majority of the constituency, but by as many of the proprietors as could be scraped together within the short space of eight and forty hours, and the hon. director then read the following proposition. (See report of Sattara debate, page 283.) Now, inexpert as I am in the laws and customs of the Court, I could only express my astonishment that the hon, director should have chosen to adopt a course which was altogether inexpedient, and altogether unnecessary, if not absolutely illegal, because, according to the by-laws, the proposition of the hon, gentleman was an amendment. Since then I have examined all the debates of this Court during the present century, and I cannot find one single instance where a demand for a ballot has been made with such a preliminary observation as that adopted by the hon. director; nor can I find a single instance where a ballot has been taken in less than nine days, and generally fourteen and fifteen days, after it has been demanded. Neither can I find more than one instance in which a question has been referred to the ballot before it has been decided upon by the Court either by a show of hands or by a division; and, singularly enough, that very precedent was created by the hon, director himself In the year 1835 the hon. director made a motion in this Court for the production of certain papers relative to the removal of Lord Heytesbury as Governor-General (See Asiatic Journal for 1835, vol. xvii. N.S., p. 272.) So it appears that when the Court of Directors have any inclination to do battle with the Board of Control, or call in question the conduct of the minister, no amount of flattery is too great to win the support of this Court; but when a question arises between the members of this Court and the Court of Directors, then the honourable gentleman is ready to start up and tell us that these are all matters for the decision of the executive body. Although the preface which the honourable director made to his proposition for the ballot may be considered a trifling matter, yet there is another point I wish to notice.— When we went to the ballot, there were tickets "for" and "against." Now, many gentlemen told me that they thought "against." Now, many gentlemen told me that they thought they were called upon to vote "for" or "against" the annexation of Sattara, according to the terms of the amendment. To show how necessary it is that the utmost care should be taken not to mislead proprietors in the case of balloting. I refer the Court to the case of Mr. Graham, which occurred in 1818. In that case there was an error of no less than 100 votes in the taking of the ballot. There was that discrepancy between the numbers given by the clerks, and it was endeavoured to be accounted for by the fact that two ballots were going on at the same time in the same room. It is therefore not an unprecedented thing that a mistake should take place in the decision of a question by ballot from those coming to the ballot not understanding the case before them. So it has happened here. I put it to you, Sir, whether it is a fair thing that a ballot should be taken upon so important a question within forty-eight hours after it is demanded. The debate began on Wednesday and was adjourned to Friday, when it finished. Sunday being a dies non, there were only Saturday and Monday: the whole thing was unprecedented. Ought not the question to have been decided by the whole constituency? But that was impossible to be done within the space of forty-eight hours. It was a great grievance; and I wish to give notice of a motion that in future no ballot shall be taken till after the question has been determined by the Court, either by & show of hands or by a division. The next alteration I propos is, that no ballot shall be taken till nine days after it has been demanded, and in a particular form.

The Chairman.—With respect to the short time that elapsed between the demand of the ballot and the taking of the ballot, I beg to say that some of the most important cases that have appeared before the Court have been decided by ballot within three and four days after the ballot has been demanded. ballot for the acceptance of the present charter, under which we are sitting here, was taken within three days after it was de-manded. And let me call the attention of the hon. proprietor to this point, that that ballot was taken within three days' notice, when there were no railways in the country; and I maintain that three days now are as long as nine days in former times. You can go further in three hours now than in three days formerly. But when the day for taking the ballot was fixed was the time for making the objection. No objection was made. It is true the hon. proprietor protested against the proposition, and in so doing acted very properly, but in point of fact there are precedents in which the ballot has been taken within a shorter period than three days. With respect to what my hon, friend has said as to the irregularity of the form in which the ballot was demanded, I have before me a dozen precedents to support that form, not only where ballots have been demanded by gentlemen on this side of the bar, but by gentlemen on the other side of the bar; and my hon friend is quite mistaken in that respect.

Mr. Weeding.—The hon gentleman is very unfortunate in both his objections. He wishes the Court to believe that he has been taken by surprise in consequence of the shortness of the time for taking the ballot; but since railways have been established, there was plenty of time. Then the hon, gentleman says that he never heard of a ballot being taken upon an amendment. It was not; it was taken upon the motion. I was one of the scrutineers, and we had put upon the board "Against Mr. Sullivan's motion;" "For Mr. Sullivan's motion." There was a substantive, original motion. Upon that the ballot was taken, and there were more than three to one against it. Sir J. W. Hogg.—It is very right that the meaning of the by-law should be understood. My honourable friend has evidently misunderstood the meaning and object of the by-law. He supposes it to be that a notice shall be advertised to everybody in all parts of the country; but that is not the meaning, purport, or intention of the by-law. It says, that East-India proprietors, assembled in a general court, shall vote either by a show of hands or by a division; but it shall be competent for any nine members to require that you shall vote in a different way—namely, by secret ballot. The Act says, that if you do so vote by ballot, it shall not be before the expiration of twenty-four hours; but neither the Act nor the by-law has made any provision for advertising the notice that a ballot is about to be taken. So that the intention of the by-law is, that those who are present, hear the motion, and understand the argument, shall, in the place of voting openly, proceed secretly by ballot. Whether the by-law is good or bad is quite dehors the question; but quoad the by-law, the simple question is, that the vote of those assembled for that particular purpose, and for that par-ticular occasion, shall be taken by secret ballot, and not by a show of hands or by a division.

Mr. Lewin. - If the ballot was to be confined to the members assembled, why is not the ballot taken on the same day?

Sir J. W. Hogg.— The meaning of the twenty-four hours notice, as far as my memory serves me, is this:—The limitation is connected with the subject of the dividend, and in order to prevent proprietors being taken upon a sudden, it was thought necessary that they should have four-and-twenty hours to consider the matter. I believe that was the occasion which prevented the determination of the Court taking place immediately. The honourable member is quite right, that as far as diately. the by-law is concerned, when nine members have demanded a ballot, the ballot would be taken eo instante; but the reason why it is not so taken is, that the Act of Parliament intervenes, and says, it shall not take place within twenty-four hours after the ballot is demanded: so that if it were not for the Act, the ballot would be taken eo instante.

Mr. Lewin. - The gist of your argument was, that the ballot was confined to those proprietors who were present on the occasion. If that had been the case, I have no doubt Mr.

Occasion. If that had been the case, I have no doubt Mr. Sullivan's motion would have been carried. (No, no.)

Mr. Sullivan.—It is quite clear I am put out of Court because I am wrong in matter of fact; and I beg pardon for having troubled the Court. The hon. Chairman has spoken of railways—was the requisition sent by post on Friday night? If it was, when would it reach Edinburgh?

Mr. Shepherd.—On Sunday.

The Chairman.—I move that this Court do now adjourn.

The Secretary then read the notice of motion handed in by Mr. Lewin, viz.: - That he should on the next quarterly Court day move for a copy of the papers placed before the authorities in this country which led them, as stated by the late chairman of the Court of Directors, to confirm the proceedings of the military authorities at Madras in the case of the 6th regiment of native cavalry; also a copy of the proceedings under which two sepoys were shot, thirteen were banished, and thirty-seven were dismissed the service, the latter without trial, or being confronted with their accusers; also a copy of the proceedings under which six native officers were dismissed without trial, or being contronted with their accusers.

Sir J. W. Hogg.—I don't at all object to the motion of the hon. proprietor. He has a right to call for any papers he pleases on any subject. The proprietors at large have to determin whether it is consistent with the public interest to produce them. But when any gentleman, in the discharge of his duty, calls for a despatch addressed by one authority to another, and that under a particular date, he has no right in his notice to embody a statement of facts which may be disputed; such a course is always opposed in the House of Commons. There it is ruled that you are not to make your motion argumentative, or to embody in it a statement of facts. Now, this notice does embody a statement of facts, and that statement is in accordance with the views of the hon. proprietor; but which may not be in accordance with the views of other hon. proprietors. If the hon. proprietor will confine his motion to calling for a copy of the proceedings of the Government of India relative to the courts-martial, I shall have no objection; but to embody a statement in his motion, is not only contrary to usage, but the form of that statement actually implies that certain sepoys were improperly put to

Mr. Lewin.—They were put to death contrary to law, and also by an illegal court-martial. I want to see the case which has been put before the authorities in this country; because if the proprietors could see that the proceedings were properly described in that case, they would no doubt be satisfied, and I should be satisfied. But as it is, I am determined that this question shall never rest either in this country or in India, until justice shall have been done. My conviction is, that those two sepoys were murdered.

Sir J. W. Hogg.—I do hope that the Chairman will,—and I am sure he will be supported not only by his colleagues, but by the proprietors at large, - exercise his own discretion in advertising the notice of motion, by confining it to an appli-cation for certain documents, and that he will not state the subject-matter, or the opinions which the hon, member has embodied in his motion. The hon, member's opinions may be such as he has expressed. He may entertain them, and it is not for us to question them; but the Court of Directors will not allow themselves to be made the vehicle of conveying to the public charges against the Government of India, of the truth of which they have not been convinced.

The Chairman.—The Court of Directors will not allow themselves to be made instrumental in the hands of any member of this Court for the accomplishment of anything that is likely to excite an inflammatory feeling in India; and in this determination I hope I shall be supported by this Court.

Mr. Lewin .- I don't care anything about the wording of the

otion. I want the papers.

The Chairman.—If you had said that at first, and had named the documents, the question would have been entertained without the slightest discussion.

Mr. P. Gordon then gave notice of a motion for a return of any Press Laws or Customs regulations, which operated against the printing, the importation, or circulation of the Holy Scriptures within the territories of the East-India Company; also, that he should ask certain questions relative to the state of the prisons in India; the prevalence of disease and mortality amongst the prisoners, and as to the fact of torture having been inflicted on some of them.

The Chairman. - Here is another motion of a similar character to the one just disposed of. The Court, I think, will be of opinion with me, that it is impossible the Court of Directors can consent to become an instrument in the hon, proprietor's hands. If the motion be not altered, I shall at once object to it.

Major Oliphant. - It is quite competent for the Court to refuse to receive the notice.

Mr. Fielder, in reference to Mr. Lewin's notice of motion, appealed to that hon, gentleman's good sense not to press a notice of motion of such a character to be published to the world some three or six months before it could be agitated in that Court. Were such a notice as this to go forth to the public, it would do a great deal of harm. He hoped the hon, proprietor would not seek to make that Court a vehicle for sending out to India that which was calculated to work great mischief.

The Chairman. - I deprecate the dissemination of such notices as much as any one, but the motion was already before the Court, and the only question was as to its postponement. It has been agreed that it should be postponed.

PAPERS RELATING TO THE PUNJAB.

Mr. Sullivan .- I want to draw the attention of the Court to some very serious omissions in the papers which have been laid before the Court relating to the proceedings in the Punjab. Those papers were called for by the House of Commons many months ago, and they have been officially laid before this Court; but if anybody thinks he can arrive at a correct opinion, or learn the true history of the affairs of the Punjab, from these papers, he will find himself greatly mistaken.

Major Oliphant. - Name your papers and move for them.

Mr. Sullivan. - That is more easily said than done; but it is evident that these papers have not been published for the purpose of showing the truth, but for the purpose of supporting a case. The first case was to show that the Scinde invasion was a wanton aggression on our territories, and the second case was to show that the Sikh invasion was a wanton invasion. There are some most serious lacuna in these papers.

Sir J. W. Hogg.—I rise to order. It is perfectly open to the hon. proprietor to move, without notice, for any papers at a General Quarterly Court; that is conceded; but if the hon. proprietor is prepared to substantiate his case, let him give notice of a motion of censure upon those authorities, whoever they

Mr. Sullivan .- I give notice that I shall move that the papers be produced; and when they are, I shall bring the question before the Court.

Mr. Sullivan handed in the following notice, -that he should move for copies of all letters from the Government of India relative to the claims of the Lahore state; and also, copies of all correspondence which had been received at Lahore from the Government of India, and their answers, which led to the articles of agreement concluded between the British Government and the Durbar of Lahore on the 16th of December, 1846.

Mr. P. Gordon. - I understand the hon. Chairman objects to the wording of the second notice of motion which I have handed in; is it in reference to the horrible mortality that has taken place in the gaols?

The Chairman. - It was in your assuming facts which have not been proved, and stating those assumed facts in language which I do not think is proper to be used.

Mr. P. Gordon.-I am not particularly wedded to the wording of my motion, but only to the substance of it.

The terms of the motion were accordingly altered.

The hon. proprietor then gave notice that he should move for copies of all the papers relative to the dismissal of Capt. Gordon in 1826; also, that proprietors be supplied with copies of the by-laws, and full means of information of all the affairs of the Company; which information, even to questions of account, they were now only able to get from papers laid before both Houses of Parliament.

Sir J. W. Hogg.—I must object to the latter motion, putting it only on the score of expense. I hope the bon. gentleman will confine himself to substantive matter, and strike out of his motion all extrinsic matter. It is quite enough to object to the motion that it would be useless to publish all which the hon. proprietor asks for.

Mr. P. Gordon. - On qualifying as a proprietor, I applied for a copy of the by-laws, and I received a copy some years old; since which time the by-laws have been materially altered; and up to this day I have never been able to obtain a perfect copy of those laws.

The Chairman. - We will give you one.

Mr. Lewin asked whether the Court of Directors had received a memorial from Madras from certain persons complaining of an interference with their religious ceremonies, and whether any reply had been given to it?

The Chairman. - I cannot answer the question now; but I shall, on next Court-day, be very happy to give any information

I may possess on the subject. The Court then adjourned.

"Education in India," observes the Bombay Times, "is regarded as something meant to enable a man to make money, and nothing more; it is the tool by which a trade must be practised, and which ought to be employed in some manufacture or other the moment it can be handled with a reasonable measure of dexterity. Not one in a hundred of our alumni, after leaving college, ever think of turning their attention for a moment to what they hear from their professors, unless in so far as it affects their income; nor can they conceive why any man should do more."

NEILGHERRY BEER. — Capt. Ouchterlony states, from actual experiment, that beer, both ale and porter, can be made in the Neilgherries with the greatest facility, and at a cost so trifling as to enable the commissariat to supply the European troops at Bangalore, Trichinopoly, and Cannanore at a rate under ten annas per imperial gallon delivered to the men, or about 31d. per pot. The conversion of barley into malt can be carried on there as well as in any part of Great Britain.

Capt. Ouchterlony, in his survey of the Neilgherry country, affirms that it is capable of furnishing, for export to Europe, from 400,000 to 500,000 quarters of wheat, of superior quality, at remunerating prices.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LORD DALHOUSIE. - The Queen has directed letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a Marquis of the United Kingdom to James Andrew Earl of Dalhousie, Knight of the Most Ancient and Most Noble Order of the Thistle, Governor-General of India, and his heirs male, by the name, style, and title of Marquis of Dalhousie, of Dalhousie Castle, in the county of Edinburgh, and of the Punjab. - Lond. Gaz., June 4.

LORD Govern .- The Queen has also directed letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a Viscount of the United Kingdom to Lieutenant-General Hugh Baron Gough, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Hon. Order of the Bath, and General and Commander-in-Chief of Her Majes. ty's Forces in the East Indies, and to his heirs male, by the name, style, and title of Viscount Gough, of Goojerat, in the Punjab, and of the city of Limerick. - Ibid.

CHELTENHAM COLLEGE. - At the annual distribution of prizes at this college, on the 19th June, the chairman (the Rev. John Browne) stated that out of seven pupils who had gone up from the college, to Addiscombe, five had obtained engineers', and two artillery appointments. In this branch of the institution, the eastern languages were most successfully cultivated by an eminient oriental scholar, A. D. Gordon, Esq., late Public Examiner at the college at Calcutta. The Rev. R. Inchbald, one of the Examiners, said, of the gentlemen who had gone from the college to Addiscombe, out of seven, who had obtained commissions, five had qualified themselves for the engineers; and he was convinced that many of the gentlemen who had gone to Addiscombe would, had they gone to the University instead, have taken high honours there. If his memory did not fail, those gentlemen who stood for the artillery ought to have been engineers. Mr. Inchbald mentioned the names of boys who had done well at Addiscombe.

ENGACEMENT OF SHIPS. — The Bucephalus and Alfred have been engaged for the conveyance of troops and stores to Calcutta, and the Cressy, Aboukir, Dartmouth, and Owen Glendower for the conveyance of troops to Bombay.

The Garrows, of Assam, have certain dishes of bell-metal, called korahs, which are considered heir-looms in each family, and are handed down from generation to generation. It cannot be ascertained where the Garrows obtain them, or where they are manufactured, the Garrows themselves being unable to give any information on the point. They are well executed, and re-flect the greatest credit on the state of the arts wherever they are made. Some are encircled with a band of embossed figures of men, women, and animals, which must have been moulded on at the time of manufacture. A small kind, called Deo Korahs, beautifully embossed, are hung up and worshipped by the Garrows. - Capt. Reynolds.

A native journal of Calcutta, the Chundrika, declares that the imprisonment of the Rance of Lahore by the British is an act only to be compared to that deed which will live for ever in the remembrance of mankind, viz. "the slaughter of their queen Elizabeth by the same people!"

The Anabas Scandens, one of the fresh-water fishes of Southern India, is occasionally found on pulm-trees growing close to the water's edge. The natives of the Curnatic assert that it is common to find them in such situations. The Tamil name Panneieri means 'climber of Palmyra trees.' It is about six inches long.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,-

N the address which I forwarded from Calcutta, dated L the 8th of November last, I announced my intention of becoming, on my return to England, a Candidate for the East-India Direction.

return to England, a Candidate for the East-India Direction.

In fulfilment of that intention, I have now the honour to state that I shall take an early opportunity of paying my respects personally to each proprietor.

The ground on which I hope for the favour of your support is the experience which I have gained in the administration of your affairs in India, having been employed during the early portion of my service in various offices in the judicial department, and for the last fourteen years as Secretary and Member of the Indian Law Commission, and Member of the Supreme Council of India.

**I have the because to be Ladies and Gentlemen.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen, Your obedient humble servant,

AND SIKH TERRITORIES.

Drawn by JOHN WALKER. On One Sheet, price 5a., or in a Case, 6s.

"A new Map of these districts has just been published by Messrs. ALLEN and Co., of Leadenhall Street, upon which apparently great care has been bestowed. The Map is very clearly printed, and the scenes of the military operations, to which so much interest is at present attached, are laid down with such perspicuity, that it would be easy to follow almost every march of the army. The Map is said to have been compiled from the most authentic sources of information."—Times, March 1, 1849.

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES.

AT No. 58. BURTON CRESCENT, FROM 16 A.M. TO 1 P.M.,

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.,

HINDUSTANI & PERSIAN LANGUAGES.

DICTIONARY

HINDUSTANI-ENGLISH & ENGLISH-HINDUSTANI.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.

In One Volume, royal 8vo. price £2. 12s. 6d.

** This work was undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—viz. a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgment of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one volume royal octavo, of about 1,000 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The First Part—Hindustani and English—contains more words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The Second Part—English and Hindustani—is also by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every advantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive patronage.

HINDUSTANI GRAMMAR, in the Oriental and Roman Characters, with numerous copper-plate Illustrations of the Persian and Devanagari Systems of Alphabetic Writing. To which is added, a copious Selection of Easy Extracts for reading in the Persi-Arabic and Devanagari Characters, forming a complete introduction to the Bagh-o-Bahar, together with a Vocabulary and explanatory Notes. By Duncan Forbes, LL.D. 8vo. cloth, 19s.

HINDUSTANI MANUAL: a Pocket Companion for those who visit India in any capacity; intended to facilitate the essential attainments of conversing with fluency, and composing with accuracy, in the most useful of all the languages spoken in our Eastern Empire.—In Two Parts. PART I.—A compendious Grammar of the Language, with Exercises on its more prominent peculiarities; together with a Selection of useful Phrases, Dialogues, and Subjects for translation into English. PART II.—A Vocabulary of useful Words, English and Hindustanl; shewing at the same time the difference of idiom between the two Languages.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.
Second Edition, considerably improved. 18mo. bound, &s. 6d.

The BAGH-O-BAHAR; consisting of entertaining Tales in the Hindustani Language. A new edition, carefully collated with original MSS., having the essential vowel points and punctuation marked throughout. To which is added, a Vocabulary of the Words occurring in the work. By Duncam FORBES, LL.D. Royal 8vo. cloth, 15s.

*6.0 The Bagh o-Bahar is the test-book in which cadets and assistant-surgeons have to pass an examination in India. This edition was prepared under the authority of the Hon. the East-India Company.

amproved and considerably enlarged. Royal 8vo. cloth 12s. 6d.

3a9 A knowledge of Persian is absolutely necessary for reading the best compositions in Hindustani. The preceding Grammar, with its Selections, will amply suffice for this purpose: when the student has finished the Hindustani Grammar, with its Selections (in the Persian character), he will find it greatly to his advantage to devote a month to the Persian before he commences the Bagh-o-Bahar.

Progress of the PUNJAB, and of the Rise and Progress of the Sect and Nation of the Sikhs, including a full Account of the Military Operations on the Banks of the Sutle; in 1846, and the Proclamations and Treaties of the Governor-General of India relating thereto. By THOMAS THORNTON, Esq. 2 vols. post 8vo. cloth lettered, price 21s.

"These volumes should be in the library of every one who feels an interest in the recent military exploits of our Army of the Sutlej, or in our future political relations of the Punjab. The work has, indeed, this double value;—it is valuable for present and permanent reference .... Independently, however, from any temporary interest which these volumes may derive from the recent events in the Punjab, they present much curious matter to the historical student, as well with regard to the religious character of the sect from which has sprung the warlike race of modern Sikhs, as with respect to the character and policy of Runjeet Singh."—John Bull.

or tunject singh."—John Bull.

"The work gives all the information on the history and topography of the Punjab that could be desired; and in the fulness and completeness of its details, and the diligence with which information has been collected, from every available source, constitutes this the best and most authentic work extant on the important country of which it treats."—Britannia.

"It is an authentic work, and its statements are perfectly trustworthy. In-deed, it will be necessary for every one having a library to add this to the his-torical department, while the miscellaneous reader will find a powerful claim in its novel and stirring information."—Cheltenham Journal.

A NEW EDITION OF

SHAKESPEAR'S DICTIONARY, HINDUSTANI and ENGLISH—ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI. One vol. demy 4to. Fourth Edition, at a reduced price.

This long approved and standard work, with great additions, will very shortly be ready for publication, together with a SECOND PART, entirely new, ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI, in the same volume. The First Part of this work,—the celebrity of which, in the preceding editions, has been fully established in both Europe and India,—will, in this edition, be augmented by many thousand words and phrases of actual occurrence in Hindustani, and which no other prists of actual occurrence in Hindustani, and which no other prists of actual occurrence in Hindustani, and which no other sian characters is throughout retained, and the etymologies are given wherever they have been discovered; still, as smaller types are used, the volume will not in bulk be materially enlarged. In the Second Part,—English and Hindustani words, as are really of common use, in correspondence to the English, as well as to discriminate the various meanings which certain English words may bear, and to appropriate to each a suitable Hindustani word or explanation. The labour and reading required to effect these objects, as well as the accuracy sought to be secured, have occasioned some delay in getting this edition through the press; as, indeed, the time needed to coilect a multitude of words for the First Part led the Author to put off, during some period, the commencement of the impression. It is, however, hoped that, by the course pursued, the utility of the work will be found so much increased as to prove that the time and pains thus taken have not been wholly misapplied.

MILITARY EDUCATION.

HALL PLACE SCHOOL, BEXLEY, KENT.

THE Official Memorandum lately issued by the Commander-in-Chief with regard to the examination of candidates for commissions in the Line, and the reported intention of the Directors of the Last-India Company to adopt a similar form of examination for candidates for direct appointments in the Indian Army, have induced the Proprietors of Hall Place School so to modify their system as to adapt it in all respects to the new order of things. In his School, the Mathematics will, as heretofore, hold the first place in the order of importance. The Latin and French Languages, together with German for the Queen's service and Hindostanee for that of the East-India Company, will be taught by masters of experience and ability. Modern History, the History of England and of British India, Ancient and Modern Geography, and the structure and composition of the English Language, will be regularly and systematically studied. Practical instructions in Military Surveying and Plan Drawing, Field Fortification, the use of the Thoololite, Box Sextant, and Prismatic Compass, will continue to be given by a Wcolwich Professor.

The Musket and Bayonet Drill, together with the Sword Exercise, are taught by a Serjeant of the Artillery.—References to many Officers both in the Queen's and the Company's service are permitted.

For Prospectuses, address Messrs. ROLFE and FLETCHER, 150, Aldersgate Street; or Messrs JOHN WOOLER and Co., Bombay.

FINE HEAD of HAIR.—Of the numerous compounds constantly announced for promoting the growth or reproduction of the human hair, few survive, even in name, beyond a very limited period; whilst ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, with a reputation unparalleled, is still on the increase in public estimation. The unprecedented success of this discovery, either in preserving the hair in its original strength and beauty, or restoring it when lost, is universally known and appreciated; and is recorded by testimonials most numerous in themselves, and certified by the highest authorities. It has obtained the exclusive patronage of Royalty, not only as regards our own Court, but those of the whole of Europe. From its exquisite purity and delicacy, it is admirably adapted for the hair of children, even of the most tender age, and is constantly employed for this purpose in the nursery of Royalty, and by the families of the nobility and aristocracy. It is alike suited for either sex, and whether employed to embellish the tresses of female beauty, or to add to the attractions of manly grace and aspect, will be found an indispensable auxiliary to the toilet both of ladies and gentlemen.—Price 3s. 6d.; 7s.: family bottles (equal to 4 small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. per bottle. Each bottle of their genuine article has the words.—ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, engraved in two lines on the wrapper, and on the back of the wrapper nearly 1,500 times, containing 29,022 letters. Sold by them at 20, Hatton Garden, London, and by all Chemists and Perfumers.

**Beware of spurious "Macassar Oils."

MIRACULOUS CURE OF A BAD LEG, OF SIXTY YEARS' STANDING, BY HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS,—Mr. Barker, of 5, Graham's Place, Drypool, at the age of 18, had a breaking out in one of his legs, which ultimately formed into an ulcerous sore, and increased in severity until he was 80 years old, when it entirely took away his power of walking; at last, after seeking relief in vain for so many years, he had recourse to Holloway's Ointment and Pills, and these invaluable medicines have cured him so completely, that he is now enabled to walk as well as most men 50 years of age.

Solid by all druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native venders of medicine broughout the whole of the East Indies.

TINIVERSAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will shew the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 9th of May, 1849, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a liberal reduction if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

THIS IS THE ONLY INVENTION FOR KNIFE CLEANING FOR WHICH HER MAJESTY'S LETTERS PATENT HAVE BEEN GRANTED, AND IS DISTINCT FROM ALL OTHERS.

GRANTED, AND IS DISTINCT FROM ALL OTHERS.

THIS Machine, so eullogized by the Press, and which, after the test of three years, is acknowledged by all to be the most useful, as well as the most successful invention (for a domestic purpose) which the present age has produced, is made in eight sizes, and thereby adapted for the smallest private families, or largest public establishments; they are portable, durable, ornamental in appearance, noiseless, and so perfectly cleanly, that they may be used in any apartment; are incapable of getting out of order, and so simple in operation, that the small ones for a family may be used by a child; whilst the saving in time and in cutlery is immense, as the number of knives each machine is adapted to take at one time are not only cleaned and beautifuly pollahed, equal to new, in less time than one knife can be cleaned on the knife-board, but are not subject to the risk of injury they sustain when cleaned by the old method, nor can they ever be worn away at the points or backs.

To be had of the PATENTEE, at the MANUFACTORY, 339, STRAND, OPPOSITE SOMERST-HOUSE.

The principals of the following establishments (among many others), in which Kent's Patent Knife Machines are in constant use, have kindly given the Patentee permission to refer to them:—

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE short interval of nine days between the despatch of this and that of the preceding mail cannot be expected, in the present state of India, and at this particular season, to furnish matters of very stirring interest. The intelligence, however, though scanty, is satisfactory.

The rebellion in the Nizam's dominions has been extinguished by the capture of the pretender, Appa Sahib, and the entire defeat of his Rohillas, after a contest in which the Nizam's troops, and especially the European local officers, greatly distinguished themselves.

It appears that the head quarters of the Hingolee division of the Nizam's army, under Brigadier Hampton, commanding that division, on the 6th May, came up with the pretender to the Nagpore Raj and his followers, at a place called Gowree, 14 miles from Hingolee. They were a portion of the body of rebels so roughly handled by the Ellichpore division, under the late Brigadier Onslow, on the 30th April, and were hastening to occupy the fort of Mahore. The force had marched between 40 and 50 miles on the night previous to the engagement, and the cavalry in advance (120 sabres), with whom were Brigadier Hampton and his staff, came unawares upon the enemy. They refused to surrender, whereupon this handful of cavalry charged upwards of 300 Rohillas, who fought with desperation, the charge being described as a most brilliant one, the whole of the European officers joining. The contest was a sanguinary hand-to-hand affair; the enemy at length fled, leaving 105 killed, 50 wounded, and 100 being taken prisoners, amongst whom is the pretender, who was wounded. The infantry having come up, did good service in scouring the jungle, but they were too exhausted to follow up the pursuit. In this gallant affair we regret to find that Brigadier Hampton and Major Lysaght are dangerously, and Captain Yates severely, wounded. Captain Orr and Lieutenant Harrison likewise received slight wounds. The rebels were, at the date of the last advices, surrounded by the infantry, and having lost their leader, they will probably disperse. The example will probably not be lost upon the refractory mercenaries in the Nizam's dominions.

The fugitive Rance is said to have been given up by the court of Nepal, and was to be escorted back to her prison at Chunar by a detachment of the 4th Irregular Cavalry, under Lieutenant Martin. Doubts are still entertained, and contradictory accounts are circulated, respecting the mode of her escape. The Rajah of Bettiah is reported to be placed under surveillance, on associate that he hall been in some way concerned in the affair.

The report that Shere Singh had broken parole and absconded is contradicted. "The Rajah," says the Mofus-silite, "his father, Chuttur Singh, and brothers, Golab and Aotar Singh, are all quietly residing in their village of Attaree."

The Punjab, notwithstanding rumours of disaffected feelings, apprehensions of outbreaks on a small scale, and other indications of restlessness, wears an aspect of external tranquillity. A letter from Lahore states, that Colonel Steinbach, late of the Sikh service, was there, having been sent by Maharajah Golab Singh on business, and that that officer's opinion of the new arrangements is in the highest degree unfavourable; he considers that an entirely different system ought to be pursued. Some untoward inferences are drawn from an order issued by the Governor-General, directing the immediate return to Lahore and Jullundur of all English ladies in various parts of the Punjab; their travelling expenses to be paid by the Government. The reason assigned for this order was, that Lord Dalhousie was averse to all the ready-built and ready-found " Barree durrees" being occupied by married people, when so many single men could be sheltered in them from the approaching hot winds. It was suspected, however, that the unsettled state of the country, and the fear lest, in case of a renewal of disturbances, Englishwomen should again fall into the hands of the rebels, were uppermost in his mind. The ladies who had proceeded to Wuzeerabad, Jelum, Rawul Pindee, &c., were to return without delay to Lahore; and those who had taken up their abode at Deenanuggur and Umritsir were to fall back on Jullundur.

There was a good deal of sickness at Lahore—small-pox and fever being the prevalent maladies. At Umritsir crime continued to increase. The number of inmates in the jail had risen, within a very short time, from 120 to 150.

The Agra Messenger states that Government had ordered the monthly allowance of Lall Singh to be stopped till further orders.

The trial of Moolraj was going on at Lahore, before a court consisting of Mr. Mansell, as president, and Brigadier Godby and Mr. Montgomery as members. The court was an open one. The Delhi Gazette says, there are no less than 300 witnesses against him, "and one lakh of rupees has been offered to any one conducting the defence!"

It is worthy of notice that a part of the British force returning from Peshawur has been ferried across the Jelum, near the town of that name, on board an English steamer, which has penetrated thus far into the bowels of the land from Kurrachee, on the shores of the Arabian Sea.

The chief incident in the local intelligence from Calcutta is the arrival, at that Presidency, of Sir Charles Napier, on Sunday, the 6th May. Landing almost without observation, although with the usual solute, he was very quietly conveyed to Government House by the Deputy-Governor, Sir John Littler, who had gone to meet him on his debarkation from the steamer. The next day Sir Charles formally assumed the chief command of the army in India, and took the oaths and his seat as extraordinary member of the Supreme Council.

The Calcutta and Bombay journals notice, in something like a malicious spirit towards Lord Gough, that Sir Charles Napier assumed the chief command of the urray on the 7th May, whereas Lord Gough's tenure of the office would not expire until the month of August; "wherefore it is clear that the latter has been superseded by the former." The matter, however, is succeptible of an explanation more soothing to the feelings of Lord Gough.

Another event of considerable interest occurred at Calcutta on the 7th May-namely, the opening of a school for Hindoo girls of the middle and higher ranks. There are already several institutions in that city for female children of the poorer classes, but the prejudices of the natives have hitherto deprived the daughters of the wealthier members of the community of the advantages of education even in their own language. Years ago, an effort was made by the heroic Mrs. Wilson to overcome these prejudices, but the attempt failed. Since then, although most of the females in native families of rank receive instruction in private. nothing has been done to afford those of the classes immediately below the very highest the means of mental improvement. The experimental institution now opened owes its origin to the Hon. Mr. Bethune, not in his official capacity as a member of the Government, or as President of the Council of Education, but as a private individual. "Acting," as the Hurkaru states, "in concert with several public-spirited and intelligent native gentlemen, he, in the short space of a fortnight, completed all the preliminary arrangements. The school was opened with twenty-one pupils of from six to nine years of age, under the superintendence of an English lady, who will be assisted by a pundit, as of necessity the instruction given will be chiefly in the Bengali tongue. The ceremony of opening the school was so far private that only the fathers of the pupils, and those immediately connected with the institution, were allowed to be present. To these the Hon. Mr. Bethune delivered a long and eloquent address." Some passages of that address will be found in a subsequent page.

The members of the Madras Civil Service have sent in a memorial to Lord Dalhousie, complaining of the diminution, of late years, of the patronage at the disposal of the Governor of that Presidency, and requesting that, as a compensation for the loss of certain local appointments, of which they have been deprived, they may be allowed to participate in the Punjab appointments. Sir Henry Pottinger is said to have backed this memorial with his earnest recommendation.

Bombay supplies but little news. Hitherto, the "hot season" had been a remarkably pleasant one, and there was every appearance of the early setting in of the monsoon; some heavy rain had indeed already fallen.

PAPERS RELATING TO THE PUNJAB.

Camp, Sidham, April 7, 1849.

On the 21st ultimo, Major-General Sir W. Gilbert took possession of the city of Peshawur. Dost Mahomed Khan had fled, with his army, on the 19th, and had reached the western side of the Khyber Pass. The city of Peshawur was found uninjured, but most of the garden-houses in the neighbourhood had been burnt by the Affghans, and the Sikh cantonment completely destroyed.

You are aware, from my dispatch of the 24th ultimo, that I looked to the occupation of Peshawur, and the flight or destruction of Dost Mahomed Khan, as results, the accomplishment of which was necessary to enable me to declare the war concluded, and peace restored. The indefatigable ardour of Sir W. Gilbert, inspiring his troops with like zeal, achieved, with singular rapidity, the crowning successes of the war; and I felt, when the intelligence of those successes reached me, that the time had arrived when it was expedient that I should not only announce the restoration of peace, but declare the measures which I had determined upon, in regard to the people who had waged against us, so fierce and unprovoked a war. This declaration would have been premature, while there remained in the country an enemy to engage the active services of our troops; but I was satisfied that to postpone it, after the attainment of complete success, when the Sikhs were prostrate, and the Affghans in flight, would be an unwise and inexpedient course, and might, in the result, be untoward.

The civil officers in the Jullundur Doad represented, in the strongest terms, the anarchy which was prevailing in the Baree Doab, in consequence of the people not knowing what master they had to obey; and the same remark was made by other intelligent officers of the army, and on detached duty in the Punjab. The hot season, moreover, was so rapidly advancing, that it was necessary to summon the officers at once to the spot, who were destined for service in the Punjab, before the heat should become so intense as to prevent their moving, it being dangerous for any European to be exposed after the middle of the month of April. Above all, the crops were on the ground ready for the sickle; and any general misappropriation, which might have resulted from a show of vacillation, would have affected the revenue to the extent of at least half a crore of rupees. For these several reasons, I considered that the period had arrived, when I could no longer delay a declaration of my policy. I had resolved not to visit Lahore myself, but to depute the secretary in the foreign department, Mr. H. M. Elliot, to make, on my behalf, an announcement to the durbar; and I had requested the Commander-in-Chief to dispatch to Lahore, on their way to the provinces, an additional brigade, the importance of the occasion upon which Mr. Eiliot was to be deputed rendering it advisable that a considerable body of British troops should be assembled in the Sikh capital. On the 26th ultimo, I communicated to Mr. Elliot, in a letter of that date, the determination of the Government of India, which he was to make known to the durbar-to the effect, that the Punjab was to be forthwith declared a portion of the British empire in India, and the state property to be surrendered. I gave into his hands a note, containing, in brief, the grounds of this measure, and desired him to present it to the council of regency. further instructed him that, if the durbar should acquiesce in the determination, he should offer certain conditions, embracing, on the part of the Maharajah, a relinquishment, for ever. of all title to the sovereignty of the country, a surrender of the property of the state, and of the gem called Koh-i noor (respecting which it was specified that it should be given up to her Majesty the Queen); and, on the part of the Government of India, an engagement, touching the future position of the Maharajah, and the members of the Council of Regency, who had remained faithful; that his highness should be treated with honour, and be allowed, for himself and his followers, an ample stipend; and that the members of the council should retain their jagheers. I vested in Mr Elliot and Sir H. M. Lawrence full power to grant these conditions, intimating that, if the Maharajah and council declined to subscribe to them, such measures, as might be necessary, should be immediately taken for carrying the resolution of the Government of India into effect; in either case, I instructed Mr. Elliot to issue a proclamation, which I had prepared for the occasion, declaratary of the resolution of the Government, and of the main grounds on which it rested.

I purpose, in a separate dispatch, to lay before you in further detail, the views of policy, of justice, and expediency, which have guided me in the course I have followed, and which it was not necessary to touch upon, except in very general terms, in the proclamation alimed to.

Mr. Ellior arrived at Lahore on the 28th ultimo; and, on that evening, after a long conference with the two most influential members of the council, he managed the negotiation with so much ability and tact that it was agreed that, at a durbar to be held on the following day, the Maharajah and the members of the council of regency should subscribe to the conditions proposed for their acceptance, after which the proclamation should be issued.

There was still much doubt in Mr. Elliot's mind whether his business would be brought to a conclusion so speedily, and so smoothly, as was promised; but the durbar was held as agreed upon, and numerously attended; the paper of conditions was signed by the Maharajah and the council, and the proclamation was read aloud; after which Mr. Elliot dissolved the durbar, and returned, the next day, to my camp.

I beg to refer you to Mr. Elliot's note of conference with the members of the Council of Regency, and to the account of his proceedings, which he has handed to me, and which accompanies this despatch. You will, I am persuaded, concur in my opinion that very great credit is due to Mr. Elliot for the manner in which he accomplished the duty he was charged with.

I desire to convey to you my high sense of the great ability, temper, tact, and energy which Mr. Elliot has exhibited in this important service, and beg to recommend Mr. Elliot for your marked approbation, and for the good offices of the Court of Directors.

I request, in conclusion, your attention to the general order issued by me on the 2nd instant, and to the names of the officers particularly noticed therein.

The Governor-General to the Secret Committee.

Camp, Sidham, April 7, 1849. (No. 20.)

I have the honour and gratification of announcing to you that the Ameer Dost Mahomed Khan and his army having been driven by the British troops from the province of Peshawur, the war in the Punjab is now at an end.

Several months ago, when authentic intelligence was first received of the Ameer having actually entered Peshawur, I caused communications to be made to the Hill tribes of the Khyber, calling upon them to stop the Passes against the return of Dost Mahomed, on the approach of the British troops; and promising to them large rewards, if they should so effectually oppose him, or obstruct his passage, as to enable our troops to overtake his army. Replies were received from them full of fair promises, which, at one time, induced me to hope that they would act up to their word.

When the time, however, for action came, nothing was done by them. They pleaded as their excuse, that the extreme precipitancy of the Ameer's flight had not left them sufficient time to complete their preparations for opposing him. Although it would have been infinity satisfactory if the Affghans had ventured to face General Gilbert's army, so as to have given us an opportunity of inflicting upon them the punishment which their most wanton and insolent aggression had provoked; still, the rout of 3,000 of their number, under a son of the Ameer, on the plain of Goojerat, and the ignominy with which they and their sovereign have been chased from the province of Peshawur, without even venturing to exchange a shot with the British troops, is for use a triumph so complete as to leave us comparatively little to regret in his escape.

Under these circumstances, I apprehend you will approve of my having been content with what had been effected, and with my having abstained from pursuing the Ameer through the Khyber, or following him into Cabool, with a view to further punishment.

The time has now arrived when it has become my duty to review, in all its bearings, the question of the future relations of the Punjab with the British empire in India.

I need hardly say that during the whole progress of the war, this question has formed the constant subject of my deep and most anxious consideration.

Before stating in detail the considerations that have led me to the conclusion I have formed, it will be convenient to trace briefly the course of events in the Punjab.

On the 27th of April, 1848, intelligence having reached Lahore that Mr. Agnew and Lieutenant Anderson had been murdered at Mooltan after the Sikh troops, who were their escert, had accepted the overtures of the Dewan Moolraj, and had des reed them in a body, the Resident call d upon the Dural art to take measures for punishing those who had committed this gross outrage against the British Government.

After long consultation, the Sirdars informed the Pesident that their troops, and especially the regular army consultation.

could not be depended upon, and would not obey their orders to act against Moolraj.

On the same day, the Resident addressed to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief a dispatch, pointing out the importance of military operations being immediately commenced against Mooltan, if it were thought practicable to undertake them at that period of the year.

The Commander-in-Chief replied that operations at that time against Mooltan would be "uncertain, if not altogether impracticable, while a delay in attaining the object would entail a fearful loss of life to the troops engaged," and he gave his decided opinion against the movement which was proposed. The Resident concurred in his Excellency's view; and the Governor-General in Council, after full deliberation, confirmed the decision.

As the wisdom and propriety of this resolution have subsequently been questioned, I trust that you will permit me to repeat the declaration, which was made to you at the time, that, in referring to the opinions of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and the Resident, I do not desire to throw upon others any portion of the responsibility which attaches to that resolu-

The decision was the decision of the Governor-General in Council, and on bim the responsibility must rest.

The question which the Governor-General in Council was called upon to consider was a difficult and perplexing one

On the one hand, it was impossible to doubt that, if there existed in the minds of the people of the Punjab any Inclination to rise against the British power, a delay in visiting the outrage committed at Moultan and the apparent impunity of the offender would give strong encouragement to an outbreak, which might spread over the whole Punjab. On the other hand, it was equally clear that there would be serious danger to the health, and to the very existence, of European troops, in commencing extended military operations at such a season of the year.

The risks which are incurred by the exposure of troops in carrying on military operations in the hot and rainy months are too well known to require description or corroboration.

Whatever the danger of the season in Hindostan, the Government of India had every reason to believe, both from the information that had been received, and from experience of the effects of elimate in neighbouring provinces, that the ordinary danger would have been greatly aggravated to troops engaged in operations at Mooltan.

The flerceness of the heat of Mooltan is reputed to exceed that of any other district, and is such as to have passed into a proverb, even in India.

The Government were in possession of plans of the fortress, which, though rude, were sufficient to show that it was formidable in its character, and would require time and ample means for its reduction.

We were already in the month of May.

The distance which the troops would have had to traverse was considerable. As the garrison at Lahore could not be materially weakened with safety, some time must have elapsed before troops could have been assembled, and could have reached Mooltan.

Thus, the toil of siege operations must have been commenced and carried on against a fortress of formidable strength, during the very worst season of the year, and in the worst district in

The Government conceived that there was good ground for his Excellency's belief that a fearful loss of life among the British troops would have been the consequence of this movement.

Moreover, the sickness and loss of life would not have been the only danger; for this involved in itself the further danger of a necessary discontinuance of operations against the fort. A failure of those operations would have afforded even greater encouragement to risings in the Punjab than a postponement of them would have given; while we should have been thereby compelled to enter on the subsequent struggle with a force greatly reduced, both in strength and confidence

These were the grave considerations upon which the Government of India was called upon to determine.

It was a choice of difficulties—an alternative of evils; and the Government of India selected that which appeared to be the lesser evil of the two. I venture still to maintain that the decision was not an error. It is, at all events, satisfactory to one to know that the course which I adopted was in accordance with the opinions of the highest military authorities in this country, and in accordance, also, with the opinions of those in England who must be regarded by all as the highest authorities there on matters connected with warfare in India.

It is, above all, satisfactory to me to know that the determination was approved by those whom I have the honour to serve, and that you not only cordially concurred in "the resolution to abstain from all movements of British troops upon Mooltan until the season should admit of field operations," but that you entirely agreed with me in preferring the risk which might arise from delay in putting down insurrection, " to the certain difficulties of an immediate advance upon the revolted province.'

Whether the immediate commencement at that time of the siege of Mooltan would, or would not, have averted the war that has occurred, can never now be determined. But this, at least, is certain, that if the short delay, which took place in punishing the murder of two British officers at Mooltan, could produce an universal rising against us throughout all the Punjab, the very fact itself betokens the existence of a deep and wide-spread feeling of hostility against us, which could not long have been

The worst that can be alleged, therefore, against the delay is, that it precipitated the crisis; and opened, somewhat earlier, to the Sikhs that opportunity for renewal of war, which, sooner or later, so bitter a spirit of hostility must have created for itself.

In point of fact, however, no hostility was openly shown beyond the district of Mooltan, until after the British army had actually taken the field.

The detection of the attempts to seduce from their allegiance the sepoys of the native army at Lahore, and the execution of the conspirators, one of whom was the confidential servant of the Maharanee: the immediate removal to Hindostan of her highness, whose complicity in these intrigues was distinctly shown: the measures taken against Bhaee Maharaj Sing, who, with some thousand men, was raising the country in the Rechas Deab, and the flight and dispersion of his followers; all combined to keep down any manifestations of disaffection in the neighbourhood of Lahore.

The distinguished gallantry and energy of Major Edwardes, (for which he has justly received the highest approbation and reward from the Sovereign and from your Honourable Court, aided by the troops of our ally, the Nawab of Bahawulpore, under the command of Lieutenant Lake, prevented the extension of the outbreak beyond the limits of the province of Moeltan: and confined the Dewan and his troops within the walls of his own fort.

At this juncture, the Resident at Lahore directed the move ment of a British force, accompanied by seige-train, to effect the reduction of the fort of Mooltan.

The Governor-General in Council, on receiving intelligence of the order having been publicly issued, gave to it his confirmation; and, in the beginning of September, operations against the city were commenced.

While our troops were on the march towards Mooltan, Sirdar Chuttar Sing, and the portion of the Sikh army under his com-mand, declared open hostility in Hazara.

Raja Shere Sing, and his troops, on the very day after our successful attack upon the suburbs of Mooltan, followed Chutter Sing's example. Shortly afterwards, he moved towards the north, and was there met by all the troops of the state from across the Indus.

Finally, the remainder of the Sikh army joined the standard of Chuttur Sing in Peshawur. The disbanded soldiers and the people flocked to the army, in thousands, from the Manjha; and proclamations were issued, calling upon all to make war upon the British.

The reduced condition of our revenue, and the state of affairs both in India and in Europe, which held out little hope of any great or immediate improvement, had rendered it the imperative duty of the Government of India to al stain from costly and extensive preparations for war, so long as any reasonable hope whatever existed of its being possible for us to avoid a war.

But when the grave events, which I have above recounted, began to develop themselves, and when Raja Shere Sing openly joined the enemy, proclaiming a holy war against the English, the Government of India felt that every other consideration must give way to the necessity of preparing ourselves fully for the renewal of formidable war in the Punjab.

It was my conviction, that the occasion was one which would require us to put forth all the resources of our power.

For, although the defeat of the Sikh army, in 1846, was still recent, and their humiliation had been complete at the time, there appeared to me to be good grounds for believing that means for carrying on a severe struggle were again at their disposal.

The official returns of the durbar showed that the regular army of the state, though very greatly reduced in numbers and power, was still by no means insignificant.

It consisted of 27,000 men, including 5,000 Goorchurras or Irregular Horse: and there could be no doubt that, on the first appearance of disturbance, the soldiery, who had been dishanded after the defeat in the previous war, would join in crowds from their villages the leaders of the Khalsa.

In like manner, the official returns showed that nearly one hundred pieces of artillery could be brought into the field; and there were strong reasons for entertaining the suspicion, that when they were wanted, more guns would be forthcoming from among the Sirdars and chiefs.

The discontinuance of our operations against Mooltan, which had taken place in September, rendered it a matter of the utmost moment, that the next attack upon that fortress should be certain, and the capture of the place as speedy as possible. strength of the fort was unquestionable; and proportionate means were required for effecting its reduction, and for maintaining ourselves, at the same time, against the Sikh army in the field.

It is, at all times, unwise to underrate an enemy. It would have been doubly unwise to do so in this case, when we had recent experience of the courage, the strength and the skill of the enemy with whom we were again about to engage.

The result has shown that my estimate of the power of the enemy was not a fallacious one.

That the fortress of Mooltan was, in truth, a place of strength will, probably, be acknowledged, when it is mentioned that, after operations were resumed, it sustained a siege by 15,000 British troops, and as many more irregulars, for a period of several weeks; receiving the fire of more than 70 pieces of artillery, from which nearly 40,000 shot and shell were poured into the place.

The Sikh army in the field has, on every occasion, been formi-duble in numbers as in skill; and 60,000 men met us on the plain of Goojerat.

Lastly, in all the actions of the war, under various officers, and at different places, we have captured in the field, or seized in fortresses, more than 200 pieces of heavy and field artillery, exclusive of 40 guns of small calibre, besides a vast number of swivel pieces. It was in anticipation of the powerful opposition, which is indicated by the results I have just mentioned, that the Government of India resolved on the extensive preparations which were ordered.

Every regiment which could be made available, without rashly weakening the provinces in India, was ordered to the frontier.

The native army was immediately augmented—a reinforcement of European troops was applied for. The Government of Bombay was requested to dispatch a strong division to Mooltan, from the side of Scinde. The Government of Fort St. George was solicited to supply, by its troops, the places of additional regiments, which were ordered to be sent to the frontier from

The orders of the Government were executed with every pos sible expedition; and, before Christmas, there was assembled in the Punjab (exclusive of the garrison at Lahore, and all in its rear), an army of 38,000 effective men, with nearly 100 pieces of artillery, and a siege train of 70 guns.

It is unnecessary for me to trace the progress of the campaign, or to dwell again on the triumphant success which the army has achieved.

These have been already most fully reported to you, and the services of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, and of the army under his command, have been commended to your warmest approval and favour.

It is enough to say, that, in every quarter, our success has been complete.

The fort of Mooltan has been reduced, the Dewan Moolraj has been captured, and will shortly be placed upon his trial for the offence of which he has been accused. The Affghans have been expelled from the Trans-Indus provinces. The chiefs who created the disturbances in the Jullundur, are now in prison.

The Sikh Sirdars, and their troops, routed at Gooierat, shortly afterwards surrendered, and were disarmed. The Ameer of Cabool, and his army have been driven out of Penhawur; and there is not, at this moment, in all the Punjab a single man who is openly in arms against us.

Having thus traced the events of the prolonged campaign which, commencing in July, 1848, has now been brought to a close, I request you to mark the position in which this narrative shews that the British Government and the nation of the Sikhs now stand towards one another.

The relations which exist between them, the duties and obligations of each, were marked out in the treaty of Lahore, and in the subsequent articles of agreement concluded at Bhyrowal.

The British Government has rigidly observed the obligations which the treaty imposed; and it has fully acted up to the spirit and letter of its contract.

It has laboured to prove the sincerity of its profession, that it desired as further aggrandizement. It has maintained the government of the state in the council of regency. It has advised the adoption of measures, which improved the condition of the troops, and lightened the burthens of the people at large. It has given liberally the use of its forces to aid the administration of the state of Lahore. It has carefully avoided to offend by any of its acts the feelings of the people, and has meddled with none of the national institutions and customs.

How have the Sikhs, on their part, fulfilled the corresponding obligations which the treaty imposed upon them?

There is not one of the main provisions of the agreement which they have not either entirely evaded, or grossly violated. In return for the aid of British troops, they bound themselves to pay to us a subsidy of twenty-two lacs per annum.

From the day when the treaty was signed, to the present hour, not one rupee has ever been paid. Loans advanced by the British Government to enable them to discharge the arrears of their disbanded troops has never been repaid, and the debt of the state of Lahore to this Government, apart altogether from the vast expenses of this war, amounts to more than fifty lacs

They bound themselves to submit to the full authority of the British resident, directing and controlling all matters in every department of the state.

Yet, when the British officers were murdered at Mooltan by the servants of a chief officer of their state, and after having been deserted by the troops of the durbar, who, unhurt, went over previously to the service of the murderer, the Government of Lahore, in reply to the orders of the resident, neither punished the offender, nor gave reparation for the offence; but declared that their troops, and especially the regular army of the state, were not to be depended upon, and would not act against the Dewan Moolraj.

The conduct of the Sikh troops, in their various districts, speedily justified our suspicion of their hostility.

Repressed for a time, their disaffection broke out in one quarter after another, till, ultimately, nearly all the army of the state, joined by the whole Sikh people throughout the land, as one man, have risen in arms against us, and for months have been carrying on a ferocious war for the proclaimed purpose of destroying our power, and exterminating our race.

Thus we see that not only has the control of the British Government, which they invited, and to which they voluntarily submitted themselves, been recisted by force of arms; but peace has been violently broken; and the whole body of the nation—army and people alike—have deliberately, and ampro-voked, again made war upon us.

If it should be alleged that this has been merely the act of a lawless soldiery, similar to that which was committed in 1845, and that it has been done against the will, and in spite of the opposition, of the Sirdars; I answer, admitting it to be so, what justification does that furnish for them, or what security can the reflection afford to us?

That which we desire to see - that which we must have, as indispensably necessary for the future prosperity of the territories we already possess, is peace throughout our bounds. That which we desire to secure in the Punjab is a friendly and wellgoverned neighbour, and a frontier without alarms, and which does not demand a perpetual garrison of 50 000 men. Of what advantage is it to us that the council and sirdars are friendly, if they have not the ability to control their army, which is hostile?

If the Sikh army and Sikh people are eager to seize, and have the power of seizing on every opportunity of violating the peace which we desire to render permanent, of what value to us, as a state, is the impotent fidelity of the Sirders? But the fact is not so. Their chiefs have not been faithful to their obligations. The troops and the people have risen in arms, their leaders have been the sirdars of the state, the signers of the treaties, the members of the council of regency itself.

If you will refer to the roll which was lately transmitted to you of those who surrendered to Sir Walter Gilbert at Rawul Pindee, and to other documents, which have from time to time been forwarded, you will find there an array of names of the sirdars who then surrendered, and were disarmed.

Analyze it, and you will find there not merely men who are of note in the Punjab, but the very chiefs whose signatures are affixed to the treaties of peace. For it is a shameful fact, that of the sirdars of the state, properly so called, who signed the treaties, the greater portion have been involved in these hostilities against us.

If irresponsibility should be sought for the Sikh nation, in the statement that their Government, at least, has taken no part against us-you will not admit that plea, when I acquaint you that, while the regency, during these troubles, gave no substantial or effective assistance to the British Government, some of its chief members have openly declared against us, and one of them has commanded the Sikh army in the field.

In the preceding paragraphs I have said, more than once, that the Sikhs have risen in arms against the British. I request you to dwell upon the phrase; for I desire to press upon your attention the important fact that this rising in the Punjab has not been a rebellion against the Maharajah Duleep Sing—that, on the contrary, the Sikhs have constantly professed their fidelity to their Maharajah, and have proclaimed that it is against the British alone, that this war has, from the beginning, been directed.

That the destruction of British power, and the expulsion of the British themselves, was the real object of the war, and not an insurrection against the Maharajah and his Government, does not rest upon my assertion alone, or upon inference. It has been avowed and declared by themselves, in all their own letters and proclamations to the neighbouring chiefs, to Mahomedan powers, and to the native soldiers of the British Government.

I will only quote a single passage from one of these proclamations, which was issued by Raja Shere Sing. It sets forth distinctly, and in a few words, the sentiments and objects, which are declared in all the similar documents, and fully establishes the correctness of the statement I have made. It runs thus:

"By the direction of the Holy Gooroo, Raja Shere Sing and others, with their valiant troops, have joined the trusty and faithful Deewan Moolraj, on the part of the Maharajah Duleep Sing, with a view to eradicate and expel all the tyrannous and crafty Feringees. The Khalsajee must now act with all their heart and soul.

"All who are servants of the Khalsajee, of the Holy Gooroo, and the Maharajah, are enjoined to gird up their loins, and proceed to Mooltan."

And the paragraph concludes with this truculent injunction, addressed to the inhabitants of the Punjab:—

"Let them murder all the Feringees, wherever they can find them."

This is not all. Not content with making war themselves upon the British, the Sikhs have laboured to induce other states and sovereigns in India to attack us also.

There are in the possession of the government many letters which have been addressed by the Sikh chiefs to the neighbouring powers, Mussulman, Hindoo, and Sikh, earnestly invoking their assistance; and the burthen of every letter is the necessity of destroying and expelling the British.

The bitterness of their enmity has carried them yet further still. No one ever thought to see the day when Sikhs would court the alliance of Affghans, and would actually purchase their assistance by a heavy sacrifice. Yet their hatred to the British name has induced them to do even this. They invited the Ameer Dost Mahomed Khan, from Cabool, to their aid. They promised him, as the reward of his assistance, the province of Peshawur, and lands which the king of Cabool formerly held—a possession which the Sikhs themselves valued beyond all price; which for years they had struggled to obtain; and which they gained and held, only by vast expenditure of treasure, and with the best blood of their race.

The Ameer of Cabool came. He raised immediately the standard of the prophet in their land—defiled the temples of the Sikh religion, plundered their villages, and most brutally treated their people—yet, for all that, the Sikh nation continued to court the Ameer of Cabool still. They have fought, side by side, with his troops, and, after their defeat, applied for the continuance of his assistance. So inveterate has their hostility to us proved to be, that the securing of Affghan co-operation against the British, has been sufficient to induce the Sikhs to forget their strongest national animosity, and has, in their eyes, compensated even for Affghan cruelty to their people, and for Mahomedan insults to their religion.

Such have been the acts of faithlessness and violence by which the Sikh nation has, a second time, forced upon us the evils of a costly and a bloody war.

If the gross st violation of treaties—if repeated aggression, by which its national security is threatened, and the interests of its people are sacrificed,—can ever confer upon a nation the right of bringing into necessary subjection the power that has so injured it, and is ready to injure it again, then has the British Government now acquired an absolute and undoubted right to dispose, as it will, of the Punjab, which it has conquered.

The British Government has acquired the right; and, in my judgment, that light must now be fully exercised.

I hold that it is no longer open to this Government to determine the question of the future relations of the Punjab with British India. by considerations of what is desirable, or convenient, or even expedient.

I hold that the course of recent events has rendered the question one of national safety, and that regard for the security of our own territories, and the interests of our own subjects must compel us in self-defence, to relinquish the policy which would maintain the independence of the Sikh nation in the Punjab.

I cordially assented to the policy which determined to avoid the annexation of these territories on a former occasion.

I assented to the principle that the Government of India ought not to desire to add further to its territories; and I adhere to that opinion still. I conceive that the successful establishment of a strong and friendly Hindoo government in the Punjab, would have been the best arrangement that could be effected for British India; and I hold that the attempt which has been made by the British Government to effect such a settlement of the frontier state, the moderation it has exhibited, and its honest endeavours to strengthen and aid the kingdom it had reorganized, have been honourable to its character, and have placed its motives above all suspicion, whatever may now be its policy towards the Punjab.

Experience of subsequent events has shewn us that a strong Hindoo government, capable of controlling its army, and governing its own subjects, cannot be formed in the Puniob

The materials for it do not exist; and even if they were to he found, it has now become evident that the object for which the establishment of a strong Sikh government was desired by us, would not thereby be accomplished.

The advantages which we hoped to derive from such a

The advantages which we hoped to derive from such a government, were the existence of a friendly power upon our frontier; one which, from national and religious animosity to the Mahomedan powers which lie beyond, would be an effectual barrier and defence to us.

But we have now seen that the hatred of Sikhs against the British exceeds the national and religious enmity of Sikhs against Affghans; so that, far from being a defence to us against invasion from beyond, they have themselves broken again into war against us, and have invited the Mahomedan powers to join with them in the attack.

Warlike in character, and long accustomed to conquest, the Sikhs must, of necessity, detest the British as their conquerors.

Fanatics in religion, they must equally detest us, whose creed and whose customs are abhorrent to the tenets they profess.

It was hoped that motives of prudence and self-interest might possibly counteract these feelings; that the memory of the heavy retribution which their former aggression brought upon them, would have deterred them from committing fresh injuries; and that consciousness of our forbearance, and conviction of our friendliness, might have conciliated their good will, or, at least persuaded them to peace.

Events have proved how entirely this hope must be abandoned. If, in less than two years after the Sutlej campaign, they have already forgotten the punishment which was inflicted by us, and the generous treatment they subsequently received, and have again rushed into war against us, it would be folly now to expect that we can ever have, either in the feelings, or in the reason of the Sikh nation, any security whatever against the perpetual recurrence, from year to year, of similar acts of turbulence and aggression. There never will be peace in the Punjab, so long as its people are allowed to retain the means, and the opportunity of making war. There never can be now any guarantee for the tranquility of India, until we shall have effected the entire subjection of the Sikh people, and destroyed its.

It may, probably, be suggested, that it would be well for us to avoid the appearance of extending our conquests over another Indian kingdom, and politic to retain the Sikh nation as an independent state, while we provided, at the same time, for our own security, by introducing a larger measure of British control into the Government of the Punjab, and by effecting such further changes as would place all actual power in our hands.

I am unable to recognize the advantage of such a course.

By the Articles of Bhyrowal, the government of the Punjab was entrusted to a council of native chiefs, subject to the authority of the Resident in every department of the state.

If a more stringent and really more effectual control is now to be established, the army of the state must be reorganized, and made directly subject to the orders of the Resident.

The Native administration must be set aside, and European agency must be generally introduced. The Maharajah would be the sovereign on the throne, and the Punjab would be governed for him by British officers.

Short of this no change can be introduced, which will give to the Resident any more effectual control tean he has hitherto held.

But, if this be done, if a British functionary is at the head of the Government, if European agents conduct the duties of civil administration, if the government of the chiefs is removed, if the army is (as it will be in such a case) entirely ours, raised, paid, disciplined, and commanded, by British offices, then I say that it would be a mockery to pretend that we had preserved the Punjab as an independent state. I conceive that such a policy would neither be advantageous to our interesis nor creditable to OUT DAME.

By maintaining the pageant of a throne, we should leave just enough of sovereignty to keep alive among the Sikhs the memory of their nationality, and to serve as a nucleus for constant in-We should have all the labour, all the anxiety, all the responsibility, which would attach to the territories if they were actually made our own; while we should not reap the corresponding benefits of increase of revenue, and acknowledged possession.

Nor should we, by such shifts, gain credit with the powers of India, for having abstained from subverting the independence of the State. Native powers would perceive, as clearly as ourselves, that the reality of independence was gone, and we should, in my humble judgment, neither gain honour in their eyes, nor add to our own power, by wanting the honesty and the courage to avow what we had really done.

It has been objected, that the present dynasty in the Ponjab cannot, with justice, be subverted, since Maharajah Duleep Sing, being yet a minor, can hardly be held responsible for the acts of the nation. With deference to those by whom these views have been entertained, I must dissent entirely from the soundness of this doctrine. It is, I venture to think, altogether untenable as a principle; it has been disregarded, heretofore, in practice; and disregarded in the case of the Maharajah Duleep Sing himself.

When, in 1845, the Khalsa army invaded our territories, the Maharajah was not held to be free from responsibility, nor was he exempted from the consequences of his people's acts. the contrary, the Government of India confiscated to itself the richest provinces of the Maharajah's kingdom, and was applauded for the moderation which had exacted no more.

The Maharajah was made to tender his submission to the Governor-General in person; and it was not until he had done so that the clemency of the British Government was extended to him, and his Government restored. Furthermore, the Maharajah having been made to pay the penalty of the past offences of his people, due warning was given him that he would be held, in like manner, responsible for their future acts. The Maharajah, in reply, acknowledging this warning, says: "If, in consequence of the recurrence of misrule in my Government, the peace of the British frontier be disturbed, I should be held responsible for the same."

If the Maharajah was not exempted from responsibility on the plea of his tender years, at the age of eight, he cannot, on that plea, be entitled to exemption from a like responsibility, now that he is three years older.

As the Honourable Company most fully approved of his being deprived of the fairest provinces of his kingdom, in consequence of the misdeeds of his people, in 1846, it cannot, on the same principle, condemn his being subjected now to the consequences of whatever measures the repeated and aggravated misdeeds of his people may have rendered indispensably necessary for the safety of British interests.

I sincerely lament the necessity by which we are com-pelled to depose from his throne a successor of Maharajah Runjeet Sing; but when I am firmly convinced that the safety of our own state requires us to inforce subjection of the Sikh nation, I cannot abandon that necessary measure, merely because the effectual subjection of the nation involves in itself the deposition of their Prince. I cannot permit myself to be turned saide from fulfilling the duty which I owe to the security and posperity of millions of British subjects, by a feeling of misplaced and mistimed compassion for the fate of a child.

Having thus adverted to the modifications of policy which might have been proposed, and to objections which have been suggested, I repeat the declaration of my conviction, that we have now no admissible alternative; that, as the only mode which is now left to us of preventing the recurrence of perpetual and devastating wars, we must resolve on the entire subjection of the Sikh people, and on its extinction as an independent nation.

We have been, for the second time, engaged in war with the most formidable enemy we have yet encountered in India. They have resisted us through the course of a protracted and severe campaign.

The Ameer of Cabool, proclaiming himself the Apostle of Islam, and calling on all true Mussulmans to unite in a holy war against the English, has joined his ancient enemies, in order to a combined attack upon us. This is no question of a province; this is a direct appeal to Mahomedan India.

If, having met this danger, crushed our enemies, and driven out the invader, we do not now occupy, and hold as our own, every foot of the Sikh territory, and of the province which has been forcibly taken by the Mussulman from under the protection of Britain; if we do not thus reduce to absolute subjection the people who have twice already rudely shaken our power in India, and deprive them at once of power and of existence as a nation:--if concession or compromise shall be made:--if, in short, the resolution which we adopt, shall be anything less than full assertion of absolute conquest of our enemy, and maintenance of our conquest hereafter,-we shall be considered, throughout all India, as having been worsted in the struggle.

We must make the reality of our conquest felt. The moderation, which was wise and politic before, would, if repeated, after the experience we have gained, be the veriest feebleness Hesitation on our part would be attributed, not to forbearance, but to fear; it would be regarded, not as the result of a magnanimous policy, but as the evidence of a pusillanimous spirit.

It would encourage the hope of restored supremacy in the minds of the States and the People of India; where hostility, perhaps, is dormant, but where it is not, and never will be extinct.

It would ensure the certainty that, before many years had passed, we should be called upon to renew the struggle which we have just triumphantly terminated, and it would unquestionably tend to bring about the time when the supremacy of the British power in India might, perhaps, be contested on other fields than those of the Punjab.

Although I have more than once stated to you that the Government of India did not desire, and ought not to desire, the conquest of the Punjab, I do not wish, by any means, to convey to you the impression that I regard the Punjab as a possession which it would be seriously difficult for us to maintain, or which would be financially unprofitable.

You are well aware that the Sikh people form comparatively a small portion of the population of the Punjab. A large proportion of the inhabitants, and especially the Mahomedan people, peaceful in their habits and occupations, will hail the introduction of our rule with pleasure.

The Sikhs themselves are warlike in their character, turbulent and brave.

But warlike and turbulent as they are, the Sikhs are not more so than the people of Rohilcund once were.

Disturbances, doubtless, will prevail for a time among them; outbreaks and local discontents may reasonably be expected to occur: but, if their subjection shall now be rendered complete, if effectual measures be taken now to deprive them of the means of resistance, or facilities for war-if vigilance be exercised over them, and if they shall hereafter be governed with justice, vigour, and determination, I know no reason why the Sikhs should not be rendered hereafter as submissive and harmless as the people of Rohilcund now are. It would be premature, at present, to enter into the financial portion of the question, except in very general terms. My attention has been given to the subject; and I have found nothing in the consideration of it which should deter us from assuming the country as a permanent possession.

The revenues are very considerable in the aggregate. A large proportion has hitherto been diverted from the public treasury in jagheers to the chiefs. A considerable amount of revenue will now be recovered from the confiscation of the jagheers of those who have been engaged in hostilities against us.

The incorporation of the province of Mooltan with the rest of the Punjab will also add considerably to the available revenue.

The additional knowledge of the country which has been acquired of late, has shown us that, in the northern portions especially, it is cultivated to a great extent, and productive in a high degree.

The soil, generally fertile, requires only moisture to bring it into rich cultivation; while, as appears from reports which I have already received, the character of the rivers which divide the country, affords singular facilities for supplying readily the means of developing the resources of the soil.

The expenses of entering on a new country must, necessarily, be heavy at the commencement; but, as the result of the examination I have made, I have no hesitation in expressing a confident belief that the Punjab will, at no distant time, be not only a secure, but a profitable, possession.

I have thus fully laid before you the grounds on which I have formed the conclusion that, having regard to events which have recently occurred, it is indispensable to the security of the British territories, and to the interests of the people, that you should put an end to the independence of the Sikh nation, and reduce it to entire subjection. The time having arrived when it was necessary that the determination of the Government of India should be declared, I directed Mr. H. M. Elliot, Secretary to the Government, to proceed to Lahore, for the purpose of announcing to the Council of Regency the resolution I had formed.

The proceedings of Mr. Elliot at Lahore are separately reported to you in full detail.

After interviews with the Members of the Council, a public Durbar was held, when the note addressed to the Regency by the Governor-General was read; the Terms granted to the Maharajah which had been signed by the Council, were ratified by His Highness, in like manner as the Treaty of Lahore; and a Proc'amation was issued, declaring the Punjab to be a portion of the British Empire in India.

In liquidation of the accumulated debt due to this Government by the State of Lahore, and for the expenses of the war, I have confiscated the property of the State to the use of the East-India Company.

From this confiscation, however, I have excluded the Koh-inoor, which, in token of submission, has been surrendered by the Maharajah of Lahore to the Queen of England.

If the policy which has now been declared, shall be confirmed, I am confident you will sanction my having thus set apart the Koh-i-noor, as a historical memorandum of conquest, and that the Court of Directors will cordially approve the act which has placed the gem of the Mogul in the Crown of Britain.

It only remains for me now to submit, for your consideration, the important affairs which have formed the subject of this dispatch.

While deeply sensible of the responsibility I have assumed, I have an undoubting conviction of the expediency, the justice, and the necessity, of my act.

What I have done I have done with a clear conscience, and in the honest belief that it was imperatively demanded of me by my duty to the State.

I entertain the hope that the measures which I have adopted, on your behalf, will receive the sanction and approval of the Court.

BENGAL. THE PUNJAB.

" LAHORE, May 3, 1849. - Here we are all safe without meeting with any serious detention; the road between Saharunpore and Loodianah is in very bad order. If the executive engineer had followed the Calcutta plan of laying down stones in the rough, and allowing traffic to smooth them down, it would have been in capital order, especially if it had been watered before the 'trophy' guns passed over it. There was a sensible difference of climate after crossing the Sutlej, and the nights are even here delightfully cool. Captain Ross is, I hear, to be the com-missioner at Leish, Mr. Edgworth is to be at Mooltan, Mr. Edward Thornton at Jhelum or thereabouts, Mr. Montgomery at Lahore and Umritsir, the centre of the Punjab, being his district, and Mr. Donald McLeod has been appointed to Julundhur; there has, I believe, been some alteration in the division of the districts with the view of making each more compact, and the different parts accessible from a central station where the commissioner is to be located. It will take some time before matters get into good working train, for as yet none of the offices are formed. It would, in my humble opinion, have been a better plan to have formed the different establishments before commencing operations, but the opinion at Lahore seems to be, that if the head of the office is present at his sudder station, everything else can be easily arranged. Every one is offered the use of camels to ride on to the most distant part of the Punjab: fancy a stout gentleman like —— spanking off to the borders of Kashmere or Sindh, and on reaching his destination, wiping the sweat off his brow, and telling the admiring crowd 'hum toomara Commissioner huen,' or 'hum Deputee huen,' or 'hum Jeinte,' the said crowd wondering all the time whence the 'Avatar' came. The Board's object having been gained, the troubles of the new incumbents commence; it is needless to ask what those troubles are: just go into the commissioner's, magistrate's or collector's office, and then imagine how perfectly bothered any of the respectable chiefs of the respective offices would be, if he were taken up in a balloon, or sent along an electric wire, to the extreme point of our present north-west frontier, and told that there and then he was to commence performing 'per se' all the duties of the offices he had held without the assistance of the practised Khodawunds! Gureeb purwurs!! or Huzoor ka hookm walahs, who had become as it were a part and portion of his official existence. I should like to see a paper written on the subject by the talented author of the 'Loose Lectures,' and illustrated by the happy pencil of P. C. T. It is all very well enjoying a quiet laugh now and then, but so long as all are anxious to perform their duties well, and work out the instructions of the Board, there can be no doubt of an effectivive administration of affairs being eventually established; where there is so much zeal, energy, and talent, the only thing required is proper direction, which will not be wanting. There appears to be some difficulty in getting commanding officers for the new regiments of irregular cavalry; exceptions have been taken to the small rate of pay for the men, the difficulty of getting efficient men and horses from those recommended for employment by the Board, who are anxious to get as many men from those irregulars who assisted us during the war as possible, employed. Young dashing officers have but little fancy for old men or old horses; surely it would have been a good and politic measure to have formed such persons into police toomuns, and kept them near their homes. They and their families would have been the first to get attached to our rule. I have seen many of our Suwars' families at their homes in Rohilkund, and know from experience that the hold we have on the hearts of our gallant soldiers is the result of our liberal and benevolent measures for the support of the old, the wounded, and the worn-out, and for the widows of those who fall in our service. If instead of enlisting those to whom we owe some favour in irregular cavalry regiments, where they would be inefficient and constantly exposed to the galling ridicule of their youthful companions, and subject to being found fault with by a zealous and energetic commandant, meraly because they were physically incapable of moving with that rapidity which his youthful spirit considers essential to give a dash to cavalry evolutions, it had been arranged that all who had made themselves useful when such services as they could afford were of advantage to us should be employed in the police, and their duties regulated with reference to their physical capacity, the whole country would have seen that we could appreciate the services of the most humble of those who having a free choice associated their fortunes with ours, and remained attached to us when we were not so prosperous as we generally are. Now that the storm has passed over, and the clouds are dispersing, we ought to avail ourselves of the earliest opportunity to prove that we can be generous as well as just in our prosperity. had been an increase to the army, and those who had claims on us been formed into local Nujeeb Toomuns, and a smaller number of Irregular Cavalry raised according to the system generally in practice, the efficiency of our troops would have been secured with very little, if any, additional expense, that is to say, in the long run. This is, I dare say, a subject, in the discussion of which you are little interested. There was a very pleasant evening party at the residency on the 2nd; all seemed amused and interested in the gay and festive scene. I myself was most agreeably disappointed, for I had heard that there was much stiffness and formality in the Residency entertainments, whereas I found that every one was allowed to do very much what he or she liked, and there was much spirited dancing, more particularly in the Polka line. Sir Henry and Lady Lawrence were kind and affable to their guests, and they were well supported by some of ther friends and relations. There is at Lahore the usual quantity of jealousy, and all who have good appointments are exposed to the ill-will and sneering remarks of their disappointed brethren, and therefore all disparaging observations should be received with caution. Moolraj's trial is to commence in two or three days. Mr. Mansell, Mr. Montgomery, and Brigadier Godby, are to form the commission, and Mr. Bowring, of the C. S., is to conduct the prosecution. It is mentioned publicly that Major Edwardes is going home as soon as he has settled all his affairs with the Board of Administration. Colonel Steinbach was at the party on the 2nd; they say he speaks very highly of Goolab Sing. The town of Lahore has been much purified during our occupancy of it; the conservancy have not been idle, but much is still required, for the roads are wonderfully uneven. The Soldiers' Garden is being enlarged, and will doubtless answer the purpose for which it has been established. The atmosphere at Lahore appears to be very dry. I have not yet felt the heat disagreeable, and the mornings and evenings are still very pleasant and cool. I am writing, at ten o'clock, A.M., at Anarkallee, with the windows wide open. The 14th Dragoons are at Lahore; why do the papers persist in sending them all over the country?"—Delhi Gazette.

FINANCIAL VALUE OF THE PUNJAB.

In an article on the annexation of the Punjab, in his impression of the 11th instant, the Bombay Times tells us, that this measure has been called for by many "for the past four years—for the past four months the call has been nearly unanimous—at least, we believe the Bombay Times stood almost alone. Latterly, indeed, the question became so surrounded with difficulties, that it was nearly impossible to find an alternative for annexation." But the unanimity of the press on this important question appears only to have confirmed our contemporary in the singularity of his opposition, although he would have been more likely to command the confidence of the public, if he had shewn us the alternative for annexation. He is not, however, convinced that measure is wise and politic as well as necessary, and he informs us that he continues in the opinion he has always entertained, "that our new dominions, instead of being advantageous to us, will from henceforth form a large drain on our finances, and a heavy addition to our cares; that, granting it to be the result of unavoidable necessity, it is one which every lover of his country must deplore, as throwing back prospect of improvement in India for a quarter of a century at least, adding to the embarrassment of our finances, and our incapacity for conducting affairs at home in a manner advantageous to our subjects; and threatens none more severely than the army, which has so loudly called for it, with the penalties which a failing revenue and extreme financial pressure must entail." We are disposed to take a more cheerful view of the prospects which have now opened upon us. Our opinion is based upon past experience, and on the great resources of our new acquisition. In no instance have we found the territories which we have definitively annexed to our dominion a heavy addition to our cares. It is only in the case of those provinces or kingdoms in which our control has not been supreme, that we have experienced any cause of anxiety. regards the financial result of the annexation, we have the strongwestern contemporary will not be verified. It would be premature to commit ourselves to any positive assertion on the subject; we have both to deal with the future, and the elements which may regulate it are as yet undeveloped. Yet, when we look at the circumstances under which the Punjab has become British,-the extinction of its military organization, after a second struggle in the field, and a second defeat, and at the productive vigour of the country of the Five waters, we think that our expecrations of success are more likely to prove true than the dolorous prophecy of the Bombay Times. The question of the profit or loss of the Punjab must be decided by the positive addition it makes to our expenditure. In a financial point of view, that portion of the armies of Bengal and Bombay which may be stationed in it should not be considered as a particular charge for its maintenance, because those regiments must have been kept up and supported, whether we had derived any assistance towards their expenses from the Lahore revenues or not. The charge which is to be entered on the debit side of the Punjab ledger must be limited to the new expenses incurred after the day of annexition. From all we can learn from the public papers, this account would appear to stand thus:-

Three additional European regiments ... 24,00,000

Seven new irregular cavalry regiments ... 17,50,000

Cost of civil European establishments ... 7,00,000

The raja and the ranee ... ... ... 5,50,000

Rs. 54,00,000

As an allowance for native establishments and contingencies, we will add sixteen lakhs more, which would bring the expenditure up to about seventy lakhs, or 700,000l. This rough estimate is, of course, open to the most extensive revisions. The revenues of the Punjab are stated in the papers to be about a crore and seventy lakhs of rupees. A well-known writer in the Calcutta Review, in 1847, put them down at about a crore and forty lakhs; but when the jaygeers of the insurgents have been brought to account, and the fidelity of our own fiscal officers has begun to tell, it is not improbable that the sum realized may come up to 1,700,000% sterling. In that care, the balance in favour of annexation will not fall short of a crore of rupees, or a million sterling. We are too well aware of the fact that in all estimates it is the scale of expense which proves heavier, and that of income which proves lighter than was foully anticipated, to place any great confidence in this golden anticipation; but there must be some very strange, as well as unexpected, disturbing elements in the calculation, if the Punjab does not prove a source of financial congratulation. Nor should we altogether leave out of view that the annexation of the Punjab may serve to lighten the expense of occupying Scinde, which seems, like an ugly apparition, ever present to the vision of our western contemporary, and gives him no rest. When we have the entire command of the Indus, and can send troops down the river to that country in which an insurrection appears as improbable as in peaceful Bengal, there can no longer be the same reason for maintaining a large force in that country. The annihilation of the kingdom of the Punjab can scarcely fail to produce such an effect on the minds of the chiefs and subjects of Scinde, as to be equivalent—for everything after all is estimated in money—to the saving of five or six regiments.—Friend of India, April 26.

PRESENTATION OF SEIKH GUNS TO LORD DALHOUSIE.

THE Commander-in-Chief was to entertain the Earl and Countess of Dalhousie at a grand ball, on the 1st of May, at Simlah, on which occasion the two guns taken up there for the Governor-General were to be made over to his lordship with the usual amount of speechifying, &c. They were, at the time our correspondent wrote (29th of April), under a handsome Sikh tent, taken at Goojerat, pitched close to Lord Gough's present house (his Excellency moves immediately to a new one at Mahasoo taken for the season), whence they were to be conveyed, on the 2nd inst., by Lieut. Bruce and some fourteen horse artillerymen of Capt. Huish's troop, in state, to the residence of the Governor-General. We believe the orders appointing the officers to the new Sikh regiments of cavalry and infantry may be expected here in a day or two, as the arrangements had been completed and forwarded to Simlah for the Earl of Dalhousie's final approval. Captain Prendergast obtains the cavalry corps that was to have been given to Capt. Biddulph, who is obliged to proceed on sick leave, and was to leave Simish for Lahore immediately. The Earl of Gifford is shortly to leave Simlah on a visit to Maharajah Gholab Singh, at Kashmeer. Since writing the above, we have been favoured with the following account of the ceremony of presentation. The writer has our very best thanks.

Simlah, 2nd May, 1849.

Yesterday evening the ceremony of the presentation of two Sikh trophy guns to the Governor-General, by the Commander-in-Chief, took place at Bentinck Castle, in the presence of the society of Simlah, who had all received invitations to meet the Earl and Countess of Dalhousie.

The rooms were so arranged that previous to the arrival of the Governor-General, the two pieces of ordnance were concealed from vulgar gaze; they were drawn up under a "sumianah" of Sirdar Ram Singh, which was also captured during the campaign; horse artillerymen in full dress fallen in as on parade, gave a finish to the picture, already tastefully set forth by the richness of he tent, the colours, standards, and the like.

At about half-past ten Lord and Ludy Dalhousie arrived, much to the joy of all, who had been kept for the previous hour on the tiptoe of expectation; without further delay Lord Gough led the way to the pavilion, and the curtains being drawn aside, the Governor-General was conducted to a scat on a raised platform, and the company having disposed themselves all around, the Commander-in-Chief commenced the reading of an address, in the course of which he congratulated Lord Dalhousie on the cessation of the war, and the acquisition of the Punjab, which he ventured to predict would prove hereafter one of the brightest and most valuable additions to our eastern empire. In alluding to the late campaign, the gallant old chief paid the most flattering compliments to the army of the Punjab, expressing the full confidence he felt throughout the campaign in their ability and will to completely defeat the enemy opposed to them, and the pride he felt at seeing his anticipations realized; in conclusion, he tendered the two guns for the acceptance of the Governor-General, hoping that when he should hereafter revisit the castles of his ancestors, the sound which they might occasionally send forth would serve to remind him of the army of British India and the glorious victories achieved by it.

The Governor-General returned thanks at considerable length for the honour which had been done him by the presentation of the trophy guns, and in the highest terms acknowledged the value of the services rendered to the Government of India by the chief and the distinguished army under his command; he said, that it had been Lord Gough's good fortune to conduct to a successful termination two of the most arduous campaigns recorded in the annals of British India, and that against an enemy, than whom one more skilful, more enterprising, or more endued with soldierly qualities had never opposed us in the field; that Lord Gough had, with an energy, determination, honesty, and singleness of purpose, brought the war to a glorious termination, rendering the condition of the Sikhs so utterly humiliating, that he might almost literally apply to them the word of a classical author when speaking in reference to a conquered foe, "that he had vanquished, compelled them, and caused to pass under the yoke." That in thus publicly and in person giving expression to his most cordial thanks to the Commander-in-Chief as he had before done officially, he was not making use of more conventional terms and empty compliments in return for the honour done to him, but that he was giving utterance to the sincere and true feelings of his heart, which were dictated by sentiments which he was not prone to exaggerate. In con-clusion he would express a wish in which he was sure not only those there present, but every person in India, whether holding the office of soldier or statesman, would heartily join, and this was that Lord Gough might long live to enjoy the well-earned and deservedly acquired honours which, through a long period of distinguished service rendered to his sovereign and his country, had fallen to his lot.

The guns are well made, but with little or no ornament, the carriages are very handsome and tastefully inlaid with brass and steel. After the ceremony was concluded, dancing commenced, and was kept up as usual to a late hour; the rooms were crowded, and the season promises to be a gay one.—Delhi Gazette, May 5.

REDUCTION IN THE RATES OF THE PENIN-SULAR COMPANY.

We are delighted to notice that the Peninsular and Oriental Company have just announced another reduction of twenty per cent. in the rate of passage-money between England and India, and vice versa, during three months in the year. The charge originally stood at Rs. 1,430; about two years ago, it was reduced to Rs. 1,280, and the present notification brings it down to Rs. 1,060. This reduction will prove a great blessing to hundreds of our fellow-countrymen in India, upon whose limited resources the heavy charge of rates has hitherto pressed The concession does not appear to be the result very severely. of any clamorous demand on the part of the public, and has, therefore, much of the grace of a spontaneous act, and is entitled to the greater commendation. The value of the favour is, moreover, enhanced by the consideration that it comes from a body of men, who, from the peculiarity of their position, enjoy an absolute monopoly of the transit from London to Madras and Calcutta. It is the natural tendency of all monopolies to make the convenience of the public entirely subordinate to the interests of the monopolists, and to inflict a heavy charge on the community. In the present instance, however, we have a gratifying example, of a totally different course of conduct. A reduction of nearly forty per cent. of charge in the course of three years is a novelty in the history of monopolies, and deserves especial commemoration and gratitude. Whether the sum thus sacrificed will be made up by an increase of passengers, cannot be decided at present; but of this we are certain, that it will secure for the company the kind sympathies of the public, which they were beginning to lose, and which may prove of no small advantage in the future contingencies of their career.

While the Company is in this complacent humour towards those who are anxious to leave the country in their vessels, it appears to be a favourable opportunity for putting in a word for those who are constrained to remain in it, and who require the period of their exile to be cheered by intellectual associations with their native land. In the name, then, of all the reading community in India, we would venture to ask the Company to reduce the rates of freight, and thus enable us to receive our monthly supplies of periodical publications and new works at a more reasonable rate. The present scale is almost prohibitory. The charge for a single square foot is not less than fourteen rupees. This is one of the most serious annoyances the directors could have inflicted on the public in India. It is of the utmost importance that the European community here, which consists almost entirely of the public functionaries, should be brought as much as possible under the healthful influences of public opinion in our own native land, and that our connection with it should be constantly renewed and strengthened through means of the press; and nothing is more calculated to promote the enjoyment and the improvement of the exiles in India than the early acquisition of the periodical literature of England.

One word more, on the subject of ventilation. Every man who has voyaged in these magnificent steamers must, of course, have a very vivid, though not very pleasant, recollection of the temperature of the cabins. The only point in which the comparison of them with the grave does not hold, is that the grave is cold, while they are intolerably hot. Any contrivance for ventilating them would increase the pleasure of the voyage to an incalculable degree, and it cannot, therefore, be a matter of Indifference to the Company. A friend, who visited the steamers which were sent some time back up the Niger, assures us that a current of air was created in them by means of a large fan worked by the machinery, and that it was conveyed by means of tubes to every cabin; the air was let in by the turning of a cock, and ventilated them to a degree which could be characterized only by the word luxury. It is perhaps not impossible that such machinery might be set up with little It is perhaps not additional expense in the steamer, and a supply of fresh air conveyed to each cabin throughout the vessel by means of those glass tubes which are so rapidly superseding cast-iron pipes.-Friend of India.

NATIVE FEMALE EDUCATION.

In opening the Native Female School at Calcutta, Mr. Bethune delivered a speech, from which we quote the following extracts.

There was another point which I had to consider well and warily, the consideration of which, however, in some of its bearings was partly connected with those to which I have just alluded. It was of course essential to great and permanent success, that all the pupils of my new school should belong to families of respectability; but the question which offered itself to me was whether should I or should I not seek the support in the first instance of those who are generally looked on as the leading men of Hindu society. I speak of such men as Rajah Radhakant Deb, Rajah Kali Krishna, Ashotosh Deb, and my collengues in the management of the Hindu College, Prosunnocoomar Tagore, and Russomoy Dutt. I had reason to believe that several of these gentlemen would not be unfavourable to the proposition of female education, nevertheless, after much and anxious thought, I decided that it would be on the whole most advisable to seek my first pupils from the families of the immediate friends of those with whom I was in habits of more frequent intercourse.

I considered that it would be open to those heads of Hindoo society to express an expectation that any institution which they agreed to sanction should have also the formal sanction of Government, and this would have landed me again among those delays from which I was anxious to escape. I reflected also that many who were able to bear the expense of giving private instruction to the females of their family at home, might express a preference for that method of education; and if the circumstances of this country were different from what they are, there is much in the arguments which they would probably urge on that score, in which I should agree with them, and it would have cost me much time and argument to point out to them that as a general system of domestic education is, and for a long time must be, impossible in Bengal, from the mere want of protime must be, impossible in Bengal, from the mere want of proproper instructresses, it is incumbent on those who really wish to serve their country effectually to sacrifice something of their own wishes, and by their example to encourage and stimulate others in fortunate circumstances. I thought it likely, too, that these men, feeling the responsibility of their station, might choose to consult upon the matter with their own friends, and thus my plans would have been canvassed and debated in societies, and have been canvassed and where I could offer no by bodies to which I had no access, and where I could offer no explanations, and exert no influence. But it is my fixed intention, if it has your approval, as I can scarcely doubt that it will, as soon as we have settled down into something of method and order, to invite those gentlemen to witness what we are doing, and to call on them to give an additional impulse to our exertions by their avowed sanction and support. I know the question has been debated among you whether it would not have been a proper compliment to have asked them and others of the same character to be present on this occassion. I trust that some opportunity may be found of explaining to them that this has not been done from want of any personal respect, but in accordance with the system on which it was thought best that the experiment should be made. In like manner, I have been asked by several of my European friends who have already heard of this design, and who are looking toward it with the deepest spmpathy, whether they could be allowed to be present this morning. I needed but have expressed a wish, and I know that this room could have been crowded with ladies, the leaders of the European society of Calcutta. But I declined this on similar grounds. I thought that this would have given an official formality which did not properly belong to the inauguration of that which strictly is still only a private institution. The time may come, and that at no distant period, when all reserve of this kind may be laid aside, when the Calcutta Female School, by whatever other and more illustrious name it may then be known, shall take its proud place among the most honoured, as it will assuredly be one of the most useful institutions of the land. I ought not to conclude without saying one word on the nature of the studies that are to be pursued here. It is well understood by you all that the plan which has been uniformly followed in the Government schools, of not meddling with the religion of your children, is to be strictly followed here. are some, I know, who are very apt to sneer at the notion of learned females, and they may form an idea of the sort of education which we propose to give to these girls, which I think it very likely that I should be ready to join with them in ridiculing. But if any of you have done me the honour to attend to the remarks which I have had occasion to make in connection with the education of the boys of Bengal, you will see how constantly I have dwelt on the importance of sedulously cultivating their mother tongue; that I have told them that we resort to English chiefly on account of the superiority of its literature, and that we expect of our students that sooner or later they will impart to their countrymen in their own language the knowledge which they have gained in ours. Judge then whether their opinions are not likely to be applied by me with tenfold force to the education of girls, who are not called on to be the instructors of others, except in the bosom of their own families, As far as literature, therefore, is concerned, we shall make Bengali the foundation, and resort to English only for some of those subsidiary advantages, and when we know that the communication of such knowledge is not in opposition to the wishes of the parents. Besides which, there are a thousand feminine works and accomplishments, with their needles in embroidery and fancy work, in drawing, in many other things which I am not half so competent to describe as my friend Mrs. Ridsdale, whose province it will be to teach them. The knowledge of these things will give to your children the means of adorning their own homes, and of supplying themselves with harmless and elegant employment. It was said long ago that "idleness is the mother of all vice:" but there is very little real idleness in the world, and when early one is not engaged in some harm in the world; and when any one is not engaged in some harmless or useful occupation, it is generally because he is employed about something worse.

It would have been great forgetfulness if I had closed these remarks without mentioning in terms of well-merited praise a fact which may be known to some of you, but probably is not so to all, a fact which of itself has acted upon me as any additional stimulus to follow out my own plan. At this moment that I speak to you, a formal plan has been submitted to the Council of Education, with a request that it be laid before Government, by Baboo Joykiscen Mookerjee, for the establishment of a Native Female School at Ooterparah, which he proposes to have en-dowed at the joint expense of himself and of the Government. What may be the result of this application I cannot now foretell: you see that it involves the same considerations which I had to anticipate in my own case, with the additional circumstance that. if the Government be favourable to the plan, it is probable that they may wish the first experiment made under their sauction to be in Calcutta rather than in an adjoining village; but I am sure that it reflects great honour on Joykiseen, and furnishes one more proof of the spirit which is awake in the land. I observe, too, in the last advices that we have from Madras, that the Advocate-General alludes to a female school which has been actually established in that presidency by two native students of the Government School there. I have written to Madras to learn further particulars, and to ask the names of these young men, that I may lose no time in assuring them of my sympathy and of any assistance in my power to give them.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRIZE MONEY.

It would be well, we think, if some law or rule for regulating the distribution of prize moncy were put forth by authority. At present there would seem to be nothing of the sort in existence, except such blind guidance as may be drawn from precedents, which are often contradictory and sometimes wanting. The consequence is, that difficulties and disputes of a very unpleasant and undignified character frequently arise, to delay the distribution, and to create ill-feeling among contending claimants or their representatives. We had lately the case of Sir Charles Napier and the Scinde booty, which has only recently been settled. Now we are to have that of the Mooltan prize money, and the claims of Lord Gough and the whole of the army of the Punjab to divide the spoil with the actual captors.

It is said, we observe, that the Governor-General has pronounced against the claim of the late Commander-in-Chief and his army, founding his judgment on the precedent furnished by the case of Kelat, in which Major-General Willshire and the capturing force received the whole in the face of a demand from Sir John Keane, chief in command of the army of the Indus. Lord Gough, dissatisfied with this decision, has appealed to the home authorities, and we think that if the precedent quoted is the sole ground of Lord Dalhousie's judgment, the appeal is likely to be successful. The precedent relied on is, in our opinion, no precedent at all. When the army of the Indus was broken up, and the Bombay column was on its way home from Affghanistan, Major-General Willshire was sent to depose the Khan of Kelat, under instructions conjointly of the Commander-in-Chief of the army of the Indus and the Envoy Plenipotentiary at Cabul. When Kelat, in Beloochistan, was stormed, on the 14th November, 1839, Sir John Keane, with the main body of the retiring army, was quietly encamped at Peshawur, having nothing to do directly or indirectly with the capture and the operations which led to it. Finally, Major-General Willshire reported the result not to Sir John Keane, but to the Governor-General himself. A case like this can hardly, we think, be regarded as an apt precedent for the one now under discussion, wherein the capturing force formed a division of the grand army then engaged in hostile operations in the same country, its leader reporting his proceedings to the Adjutant-General for the information of the Commander-in-Chief. We should be glad to find the question decided in favour of the captors, for we think they deserve their reward; and the booty, if distributed to the whole army of the Punjab, would be but an inconsiderable trifle to everybody except Lord Gough, who would pocket an eighth. We think, too, it might be shown that the captors alone have a right to the prize, for they were before the place ere the army of the Punjab was formed; and it might be argued that though the Mooltan force helped to forward the conquest of the Punjab, the army of the Indus did nothing, morally or physically, towards the capture of Mooltan.—Hurkaru, May 11.

REVIEW of H.M.'s 96th IN FORT WILLIAM BY THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

The lately arrived 96th regiment were reviewed in the fort at daylight this morning (11th May) by Sir Charles Napier. So quietly had the appointment been made, that scarcely half a dozen spectators, besides military men, were present. Sir Charles, punctual to a proverb, reached the parade, accompanied by the town-major, before a single officer of the regiment had made his appearance, and finding no other amusement, walked into the barracks. He soon returned, however, and subjected the regiment to a minute inspection, after which it marched past in slow, and again in quick time, and then advanced in line. At the close Sir Charles Napier addressed the men in a characteristic speech. After alluding to his former connection with the regiment, he said—

"I am very glad to meet the 96th again. We have both been a good deal about the world since we were last together, and I am very glad to hear such a good account of the regiment. Your colonel tells me that you are not only in good health, but that you are good in conduct—that you have very few men in hospital. Now, this is all right, and I hope you will continue to bear a good character. But let me give you a bit of advice—that is, don't drink. I know young men don't think much about advice from old men. They put their tongue in their cheek and think they know a good deal better than the old cove that's giving them advice. But let me tell you, that you're come to a country where, if you drink, you're dead men. If you be sober and steady, you'll get on well. But if you drink, you're done for. You will either be invalided or die, I know two regiments in this country—one drunk, the other didn't drink. The one that didn't drink is one of the finest regiments, and has got on as well as any regiment in existence. The one that did drink has been all but destroyed. For any regiment, for which I have a respect—and there is not one of the British regiments whom I don't respect—I should always try and persuade them to keep from drinking. I know there are some men who will drink in spite of the devil and their officers, but such men will soon be in hospital; and very few that go in, in this country, ever come out again. I wish the 96th regiment every success, and am very glad to see it in the state it is." After expressing to Major Cumberlege his great gratification, he called the serjeant-major of the regiment, with whom he had a few minutes' confidential chat. He then dismissed the regiment, and proceeded to an inspection of the arrenal.

To our non-military apprehension, the 96th is justly deserving of the high encomiums passed upon it by Sir Charles Napier. Every movement was made with the greatest steadiness and precision; and the men have a fine healthy appearance, but which, alas, they will speedily lose in this climate. The regiment has also a superior band, and we trust that the officers will allow the inhabitants of Calcutta to judge of its merits, by permitting it to perform on the Esplanade on certain appointed evenings. How many hundreds remember the pleasing break in the monotony of their evening drive occasioned by the sweet sounds of the excellent band of the 62nd. We trust the 96th will establish an equal claim to immortality in the hearts of all the fair vesper visitants of "the Course."

THE GOVERNMENT PATRONAGE OF THE NEWS-PAPER PRESS IN INDIA.

The Hurkaru has just republished from the London Law Review of February last, a long, and, on the whole, a well-written article on the Crown Courts in India, to which, if an opportunity should arise, we shall be happy hereafter to revert. It is apparently from the pen of one who has lived in India, and is well acquainted with the state and feelings of society, and the condition of the various Courts, Company's as well as Queen's. His remarks are likely to be received with confidence by those who are not acquainted with the case; and it becomes, therefore, the more necessary to correct, without delay or qualification, the utterly unfounded assertion he has hazarded regarding the character and independence of the Indian Press. To perform this duty effectually, we shall be constrained, for once, to make an allusion to our own position. But we trust that the object we have in view, the vindication of the Indian Press from the charge of venality and subserviency, will be considered sufficient to relieve us in the opinion of the generous and considerate, from the reproach, which would otherwise attach to the intrusion of personal and individual considerations in a public journal.

The writer in the Review says, "Another remark should also be made to serve for those who would provide themselves with a key to understand the Indian press. The local government having in their disposition nearly all the patronage to local appointment, have usually been enabled to secure one or more of the ablest newspapers at each presidency in their interest; and it is curious enough to observe that while these journals affect sturdy independence, in their censures of the Queen's Courts, of the Board of Control, and even of the Court of Directors, none of whom have any patronage to bestow for which journalists are available, the local governments for the time are always the objects of unmeasured praise." If, as we suspect, the writer of this paragraph has been in India, and lived and moved in society. he must have been fully aware at the time when he penned these remarks that they were not in accordance with the truth. If on any occasion we have ever felt disposed to suspend the conventional rule which debars the fourth estate, equally with the third, from the use of the word "false," it is in reference to this assertion.

Of the eighteen editors of the various papers published on the continent of India, the only editor in any measure connected with Government is the conductor of the Friend of India. But the office which he holds was not bestowed with the slightest reference to his position as the editor of a public journal, which, moreover, at the time, possessed but a very limited circulation. The circumstances under which the connection originated were these:-The translatorship of the Regulations into Bengalee had been held for many years by the venerable colleague of the editor, the late Dr. Carey, by whom he had been trained up in the craft and mystery of translation, and with whose assistance he had published various works in that language. Dr. Carey's office was swept away in the current of Lord William Bentinck's economical reforms, and for nine years the duties of it were entrusted successively to various covenanted servants, who took the translation in hand, when they happened to find leisure from other occupations. The translations of the Acts of Government, which were made binding on the country from the date of their promulgation, had at length fallen two years into arrears. It was in these circumstances that Lord Auckland made an offer of the office to the editor of this journal, upon an allowance of Rs. 500 a month, but quadrupled the work by including in the engagement the translation of the Circular Orders of the Sudder Court, the Sudder Board, the Accountant-General and the Superintendent of Police, the Constructions, and whatever reports of Cases the Sudder Court might think fit to select. It is the acceptance of this office by one editor which the writer in the Law Review has laid hold of to impeach the independence of the whole press of India.

That the offer was proposed without the slightest view to our editorial position, is abundantly proved by the fact that during the nine years in which we have held it, not the remotest hint has ever been given that it carried with it any editorial obligation on our part, or that the severest strictures on the measures of Government which appeared in its columns-not even those on Lord Ellenborough himself-were considered inconsistent with our situation. Nor have we ever felt our editorial independence in the smallest degree weakened by the connection. We are, of course, not ignorant that our contemporaries are in the habit of casting the office in our teeth, and charging us with subservience whenever our opinion of the measures or conduct of Government happens to differ from theirs, though they fail to give us any credit for independence when we agree with them in their censures. But we are all liable to have our motives impeached; it is one of those chances of war, for which every editor must be prepared when be enters the arena. Our motto, during the fourteen years in which we have edited this journal, has been "measures, not men," and while we have endeavoured to avoid all personal animadversions on official characters, we have always considered ourselves at liberty to discuss the measures of Government with the utmost freedom; and our experience teaches us that this is, after all, the surest mode of securing reform. We should not have ventured thus to allude to our own career on the present occasion, if it did not appear necessary to refute the charge of venality brought by the writer in the Law Review against the Indian press, by demonstrating that in the only instance in which an editor has become connected with Government by the acceptance of an appointment, the post has not been conferred with any intention to influence his editorial opinions, nor has it been considered either by Government or by the editor himself as in the smallest degree shackling his freedom.

On such a subject an editor's own opinion may justly be deemed liable to suspicion, and we therefore gladly avail ourselves of the aid which the Englishman has afforded us in the assertion that "it is quite certain the majority of readers would abandon any journal which was believed subservient to Government, unless it had some peculiar recommendation, by reason of extent or priority of information, or general superiority of management. Now, it happens that our circulation has more than trebled, since we began to eat the Company's salt, and as we lay claim neither to priority of information, nor to superiority of talent-and in this matter our contemporaries will not refuse us their full concurrence -- the increase of our subscription list since 1840 can be ascribed only to that spirit of independence which the writer of the Review says the Government endeavours to smother by its patronage. We would only further remark, for the edification of the law reviewer, that the office we hold, which, as a token of the confidence of Government in our knowledge of the vulgar tongue of Bengal, we cannot sufficiently prize, has yet been so much cast into the shade, by the patronage which this journal has since re-ceived from the public, that its value as a bribe, in which light the writer is pleased to consider it, has become almost extinct. weekly acknowledgments we are enabled to make of the kindness of our subscribers will shew them that whatever relation the income of the office may once have borne to the returns of the paper, it is not at present more than one-fourth of its profits.— Friend of India.

SIR CHARLES NAPIER AND THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

THE duties which now devolve on a Commander-in-Chief of all India seem to require that he should pay a visit to the seat of Government, and personally inspect the various military departments which it will fall within his province to regulate and modify. The duties of the new Commander-in-Chief differ as much from those of his predecessors, as the present state of the empire differs from its condition at any former period. Every independent or antagonist military power within the Indus has been extinguished: for the first time in the last hundred years we have not an enemy which a detachment might not crush. Our boundary has been extended to Peshawur, and we have now a length and a breadth of dominion, equal to 1,500 miles, under our own absolute and undivided control. This new position brings with it new duties and new obligations. We require that our military establishments should be brought to a suitable correspondence with this new state of things, and that those arrangements which were dictated by our former position, our emergencies, and our apprehensions, should be remoulded and accommodated to the change of circumstances. Arrangements which were judicious when our farthest military station was Allahabad, can only be a source of inconvenience and inefficiency when our flag floats eight hundred miles beyond it, and the great bulk of our army is cantoned above that station. have now to exchange the active duties of the field for those of the cabinet, and to undertake the reformation and improvement of the internal economy of the army. A large circle of new duties of the most important nature now devolves on the Commander-in-Chief as the military member of the Government; and these duties require large and comprehensive views, varied experience, a vigorous mind, and great resolution of character. The natural tendency of all institutions is to degenerate into mere routine. They gradually come to be so governed by mere red-tape principles, and to be so smothered with forms, that the quintessence of vigour and efficiency is lost. It is no imputation on our Indian officers to say that they present no exception to the universal rule. It would be folly to deny that time has bred many inconveniences and some abuses in our system, though we firmly believe that they are fewer in number or in degree than will be found in any other establishment of What we now require, is an entire remodelling equal antiquity. of those establishments which were adapted to other times when we had enemies to provide against and there were eight hundred pieces of cannon in the hands of those who would not scruple to turn them against us. For these reforms, we seem to require that decision of character and that rough energy, for which Sir Charles Napier is so distinguished. We want one whom no feeling of nepotism, no indolent acquiescence in the statu quo, no tender sympathies for individual or for class interests, and no dread of opposition will deter from his purpose. At such a period of our empire as the present, a happier selection could scarcely have been made of one to preside over the recasting of our military establishments, to suit the new position we now occupy in India, and to eradicate the evils which insensibly arise with the course of time in all institutions. In addition to these general objects of solicitude, we require,—now that the whole course of the Indus is our own, from the mountains to the sea,—that our military arrangements for the occupation of the Punjab should be regulated with a view to their influence on our military establishments in Scinde. The occupation of the Punjab by our own troops will doubtless reader it possible to diminish the number and the cost of the military occupation of Scinde; and Sir Charles Napier's thorough acquaintance with the nature of our position in that province, and the character and resources of the border tribes, will enable him to regulate these mutations so as to make the army of Scinde and the army of the Punjab a mutual support to each other.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE EXPRESS with the Overland Mail of March 31 reached Calcutta on the evening of the 7th May. The Bentines arrived the previous day.

THE ORDER LIMITING STAFF ABSENTEES FROM REGIMENTS. Our military readers are aware that there is an order probibiting the withdrawal of more than two captains and three lieutenants from every regiment of N.I., and of four captains and six lieutenants from either of the European regiments. There is no doubt that the order is one that should be rescinded, or rather modified, because, in the present state of affairs, the number of staff appointments filled by military men is actually greater than the number of officers made available by that order. So long, however, as it is in force, and so long as there are regiments in the service from which the available number has not been withdrawn, we shall continue to consider it a great injustice to take officers from such corps as have already furnished their quota or We find, for example, that while, in the very first regiment N.I. on the list, there are two captains and two lieutenants on staff employ, there were, until very lately, no less than five captains absent from the 2nd grenadiers, and we could multiply instances without number. In the 12th N.I. there is but one captain absent on staff employ, while in the 16th four are absent. In the same 16th there is only one lieutenant on staff employ, while in the 26th light infantry there are five employed extra regimentally. There is no doubt the rule was an unwise one, but at the same time no denying that it is a most convenient one, as it affords such excellent opportunities for evading troublesome applications, when there are nearer and dearer friends to serve !- Delhi Gazette, May 4.

REVENUE OF THE PUNJAB.—The following extract from the Delhi Gazette is almost conclusive as to the system of revenue about to be adopted in our newly-acquired territories beyond the Sutlej:—"Roobukarees were issued to the Commissioners regarding the levying of the revenue, which is for the next three years to be carried on on the footing hitherto in practice in the Punjab. At the end of the three years the whole country will be properly surveyed, and every village assessed for a definite period as in the neighbouring provinces." The improvement of the Punjab, and the comfort of its inhabitants, must depend in a great measure upon a moderate assessment and long leases. It is wise to continue the present system for two or three years, or even a longer time, until we have acquired a sufficient knowledge of the country and its agricultueal resources, to be able to avoid a permanent sacrifice of the public interests, or too great a pressure on private industry.

Mr. MURRAY GLADSTONE Was elected a director of the Bank of Bengal on the 2nd May, in the place of Mr. M'Kinlay, who has been absent at the Mauritius, and has outstayed the period of leave allowed by the Bank Charter.

THE PUNJAB MEDAL.—The Delhi Gazette notices rather a remarkable occurrence between the general order of Lord Dalhousie relative to the bestowal of a medal on the troops engaged in the recent campaign, and that raised by the Commander-in-Chief on the same subject. In the former the honour is to be given to all serving "in the Punjab," in the latter to all serving "with the army of the Punjab," The latter definition would, we fear, exclude Lieutenants Lake, Herbert, and Nicholson, and Captain Abbott, all of whom have rendered admirable service to the state, and are unquestionably deserving of reward. It cannot be, as a contemporary has observed, that any feeling of jealousy should cloud the mind of the Commander-in-Chief, more especially as even Lord Gough's limitation of honours would still admit Major Edwardes to the enjoyment of the medal. As the feelings entertained towards this gallant and successful soldier at the head-quarters of the Army are no secret, and differ materially from those of the public authorities in England, any modification of an order which admits him and excludes others, must have originated in a mistake, and is not the result of design.— Friend of India.

Trank with Egypt.—According to the annual report of the Alexandria Custom-House, it appears that during the year 1848, the total value of exports from Egypt is 1,573,000/. stering, and of imports to Egypt 1,481,000/. sterling. Both of exports and imports England has, as usual, had by far the greatest share, the total value of exports to Great Britain, Malta included, being 716,000/. sterling; and of imports from Great Britain, 641.000/. There were exported from Egypt to Great Britain besides minor articles—81,400 cwt. of cotton, value 114,000/.; 68,500 cwt. of flax, 48,000/.; 1,409 cwt. of elephant's teeth, 22,600/.; 6.680 cwt. of gum arabic, 20,000/.; 26,000 cwt. of natron, 11.500/.; 11,900 cwt. of wool, 8,500/.; 21,28 cwt. of senna, 4,600/.; 2,000 cwt. of mother of pearl, 2,000/.; 17,000 ib. of ostrich feathers, 11,000/.; 38,000 ib. of opium, 1,382/.; 322,000 quarters of beans, 227,000/.; 146,000 of wheat, 128,500/.; 35,000 of linseed, 44,800/.; 45,000 of barley, 21,740/.; 815,000 of chick peas, 11,800/.; 10,000 of lentils, 6,532/.; 9,400 of Indian corn, 6,000/. The imports from Great Britain comprise the following articles:—cotton manufactures of the value of 394,000/.; indigo, 48,000/.; iron, 40,000/.; copper, 15,000/.; cochineal, 15,000/.; earthenware, 6,000/.; pitch, 2,600/.; lead ore, 1,700/.; ooals, 28,000 tons, besides the quantity imported for the use of the steamers of the Peninsular and Oriental Company and the East-India Company at Suez. The number of Merchandria is 1845, of which 375 carried the English flag. The trade between Alexandria and France and Trieste declined very considerably during the past year. Egypt, it is supposed, is more and more coming under the civilizing influences of Europe, which to a greater or less extent follow mercantile intercommunion.— Oriental Christian Spectator.

Lieur. Miller, of the 22nd Regiment of Foot, has been dismissed the service for an overcharge of one hundred rupees in a canteen account, and also for detaining 192 rupees in a second-account. The case appears a somewhat singular one. The offences alleged occurred in some accounts for the months of September and October, 1818, and the court-martial does not sit till April, 1849. That an officer may be so dead to all sense of honour and honesty as to falsify accounts or embezzle funds, is unfortunately proved by sundry cases not to be impossible, but that he should run the certain risk of a loss of his commission and expulsion from society for 300 rupees, we can scarcely credit. We could wish that the Court had stated the grounds upon which the guilt of the officer was proven, more especially as it appears there was a native accountant to whose charge the books and management were always entrusted. — Friend of India.

SUMMARY EXECUTION. — Some of our readers may recollect a case of summary execution which occurred in the war in Affghanistan. A sowar of the 2nd Bengal cavalry was shot dead by an officer when supposed to be in the act of plundering, but who had really turned into a field to relieve himself. This officer is now discovered by the Bombay Times to have been Lord Keane himself, and the statement is accompanied by so minute a detail of the facts that we see no reason for doubting its correctness. The editor, or his informant, explicitly declares that Lord Keane must have been well aware that the man was not plundering, and if this assertion is justified by the circumstances, as it would appear to be, the act was most inhuman. Otherwise, if Lord Keane did think that plunder was the man's object, the immediate summary punishment was right according to every military code. One of the greatest evils of war arises from the license of the troops, and this can only be checked, particularly among native soldiery, by the most stringent, and almost despotic exercise of authority.—Friend of India.

MELANCHOLY OCCURRENCE.—A coroner's inquest is about to be held on the body of a Mr. Jones, of the Pilot service. It appears that a brother officer, Mr. Pennington, went to the residence of Mr. Jones, on Saturday, to invite him to take a walk. The latter was asleep on his bed, and made no reply to this invitation, upon which Mr. Pennington struck the sleeper with a stick, and not succeeding in awaking him, got into a passion and assaulted the defenceless man so violently that he died a few days after from the effects of the blows received. We hear that two of his ribs were fractured, besides other more serious injuries. Such are the circumstances of this melancholy case as related to us. We hear that Mr. Pennington once met with an accident which fractured his skull, which was trepanned, and that he has been at times ever since occasionally eccentric, especially after any intemperance. Whether he was in one of these fits of excitement at the time, the coroner's verdict will probably decide.

FROM THE METEOROLOGICAL REGISTER of the surveyorgeneral's office, it appears that, during the early part of May, the thermometer frequently stood above 100 degrees in the shade.

WUZERABAD, May 1. - The 9th Royal Lancers are encamped at Sirocca, about four miles from Wuzeerabad. building villa bungalows in the most tasteful style imaginable, amidst the gardens and aromatic pleasure-grounds in the immediate vicinity of their camp. They are chiefly of pucka brick, so substantially built that it would seem they anticipate a permanent cantonment in the Punjab; and from the elegance of the houses, as well as the attractive appearance of the country, I should think no lady would consider the locality or general advantages inferior to any in India. I heard the 14th light dragoons passed through the 9th lancers' camp on the 26th April en route to Lahore, with band playing merrily and colours flying gaily, delighted to have left the threatened prospect of canvass through the hot season. The 2nd European, the 30th and 56th N.I. are within a short distance of Lahore. The 30th march on to Meerut. I see from a note that the 14th light dragoons have just marched into quarters at Lahore from the vicinity of the Khyber, and that a great number of the officers are suffering, from their long forced marches and their six months' campaign, with fever and dysentery, &c. I believe the regiment "left Bombay in 1845, and proceeded to Agra and then to Meerut, subsequently to Umballa, and then to Ferozepore;—soon after to Labore, and then to take the field without remaining at any station for the last four years, which is probably the cause of the extrardmary promotions through retirement in the 14th."

SURVEY.—It is said that Government has ordered a fresh survey of lands near the Damooda in order to devise means for checking the inundations which so constantly occur there.

MAJOR BUTLER'S FORCE having made a circuit of the Baree Doad in search of arms amongst the inhabitants, oscillating between Deenanuggur and Umritser, are about to return to quarters, and will cross the Beas into the Julundhur Doab, as soon as the corps to relieve them make their appearance. The search for arms has been as successful as could have been expected; the villages to the north of the Doab yielded the most plentiful harvest, "proving either," says a correspondent, "that there the inhabitants are more warlike, or that in the villages searched latterly, towards Umritser, they have made use of the time given them with success to secret their arms.—Hurkaru.

JESSORE LETTERS report fine showers of rain over the northern and eastern parts of the district. Those factories which have enjoyed rain report very favourably of their prospects.

Service at Monlean.— We believe that hitherto Lieut. Richardson, of the 49th N. I., is the only officer whose services at Mooltan have been publicly recognized and rewarded by the Commanderian-Chief. We are, therefore, happy to learn that the adjutancy of the 7th battalion of artillery at Meerut, about to be vacated by Lieut. Money, is to be conferred on Lieut. Alexander, on account of his distinguished conduct at the siege of the fortress.

Accounts of the late Ecclesiastical Registrar.—It has been generally known for some past that the report of the late committee appointed by the Chief Justice to investigate the accounts of the late ecclesiastical registrar was completed, and a copy sent to England by the February steamer. Another copy is now open to inspection at the administrator-general's office on payment of a fee. We were told that the Bengal Government intended to publish the report, but have been deterred by the expense, as the schedules appended to it are very voluminous. The report itself, however, is not long, and ought to be published. We understand that Sir Thomas Turton is preparing a pamphlet in reply, and his friends assert that he will beable to show that the losses which have occurred in his office have been entirely occasioned by the failure of the Union Bank. It would be fair to him that the report of its statements which are not merely facts, but arguments should not make its appearance until he is ready with his answer.—Englishman, May 4.

Arrival of Sir Charles Napier.—We have not yet heard where and with what ceremonies the landing of Sir Charles Napier was effected yesterday, but we know that the warning guns were fired at about half an hour after noon, that the Fort roared a salute about a quarter to four, and that a few minutes before that hour the old hero was ushered into Government House by a sprinkling of staff and three or four gentlemen in plain clothes whom duty or curiosity had nerved to a defiance of the impending shower. Sir Charles was brought up from the ghat in a carriage of very modest character, and was received altogether with as little of ceremony and display as even he could reasonably desire. Of the crowds who would under more favourable circumstances have waited his landing, many perhaps were kept at home by the sanctity of the day, more by the threatening state of the weather—the advent of Shaitan ka Bhaee being appropriately heralded by whirlwhind and storm—while still more, we believe, were misled by a supposition that the debarkation would not take place till the evening. The detachment of native infantry on duty at Government House was drawn up as a guard of honour to receive the new Commander-in-Chief, and Sir Charles's first act on alighting from the carriage was to address himself to subahdar in command with whom he conversed for a minute or two. A friend who was present describes the distinguished veteran as looking more hale and stout than any would expect to see him.—Bengal Hurharu, May 7.

A correspondent of the Bombay Courier writes :- " With what ceremonies or honours Sir Charles was greeted beyond that of a salute from the Fort, I have not yet heard. I was, however, one of the fortunate few who saw him enter Government House at about half-past 4 o'clock, r. m. The sanctity of the day, and the unsettled weather of the hour, as also perhaps the general belief that the veteran general would not land till near sunset, gave an air of privacy to the occasion that contrasted strongly with the enthusiasm which was to have been expected. As befitted the brother of the evil one, Sir Charles came amongst us heralded by a squall and a whirlwind; and the thunder from the saluting battery was answered by the growling of that above. I was passing Government House on his approach, and turned into the enclosure to see him alight. There I found myself one of four Sahibs in plain clothes, and a lot of the staff, who had assembled to receive the "conquering hero." On descending from the barouche in which he was brought from the ghat, he turned to speak to the native officer in command of the Sepoy guard, which alone was drawn up to receive him; and I dare say the venerable "Jack" will feel himself a few inches taller for the interview. After this, the old gentleman, whom I had no difficulty in recognising after seeing his portrait, trotted up the big steps, and so disappeared from the sight of his admirers. He with all his suite, was dressed in the blue frock coat, and he wore his plumed cocked-hat. Of course he is not sworn in to-day, being Sunday; and it is doubtful, I think, if he will be so, till he hears from Lord Gough.

ARCHÆOLOGY.-A couple of curiosities, interesting to archæologists, have been brought to light during the last week. The workmen employed in the knocking down of a house and digging up its foundation, to make room for a new read, in the Motee Kutra, in the city of Agra, found two marble figures, about two feet in beight, one of black, the other of white marble, which, from their appearance, have been buried some hundreds of veurs. One figure, that of a male, is seated cross-legged, with his hands open before him, and the hoods of nine snakes form a sort of a parasol over his head. The other is a female figure, also seated, and both seem to be idols belonging to the sect of the Jains, a great number of whom reside in the street in which they were found. They have inscriptions on them, which are being decyphered by a pundit, under the direction of a magistrate. We hear it said that, from the inscriptions, it appears that one of the idols is some 800 years old, and the other of the reign of Akhbar. They had eyes of crystal, one of which is missing since they were dug up. Hundreds of natives have visited them, and the man in whose premises they were found has been offered Rs. 150 for them by the Jains, but without success. Being a Mahomedan, he has hit upon a notable plan for securing a good price for them eventually—he pretends he is not going to sell them, but, being a sincere Musselman, and one that abhors idolatory, he intends to keep the idols in his house and belabour them with his shoes some five or six times a day, for the edification of the faithful, and the discomfiture of their infidel worshippers. To save their beloved idols from the daily infliction of this dignity, it is supposed the Jains will "stump up " a very hadsome sum.

Delhi.—On the day on which such stormy weather occurred here (Thursday, the 3rd May) it appears that a severe hail-storm took place at Simla, which did great damage to the gardens there. At Kurnal, a similar, but still heavier, fall of hail cleared the trees of all the promise of fruit they bore. (From subsequent letters we learn that the stormy weather continued for three days at Simla, and on one occasion the fall of hail was as great as to cover the ground for several inches.)—We are given to understand that although the Customs collections of Delhi for the year ending 30th April, 1849, have exceeded those of the former year by above two lakhs, the whole customs revenue of the N.W. provinces has fallen from fifty-four lakhs, of the previous year, to forty-nine lakhs for the one that is past. We will venture to say that the next year's peace will bring the income not only up to, but considerably above, its average standard. On the 30th April Mr. Dickens moved, before a fall bench in the Supreme Court of Calcutts, for a writ of habeas corpus, in the matter of Samuel Valentine Foy, "a prisoner in the Rhotuk Jail, in the N.W. provinces." The Court felt some doubt about about the case as being a revenue matter, and refused the writ in the first instance; but granted a rule nisi to be served on the magistrate in charge of the jail, and the attorney of the East-India Company to show cause.—It affords us much satisfaction to learn that some earnest friends of the propagation of Christianity in this station, are seriously contemplating the establishment of a Local Missionary Institution, in connection with the Church of England, and we trust that success may attend their pious and praiseworthy endeavours.

THE CAPTURED GUNS. - The greater part of the captured guns (111 in number) arrived at Umballah on the 30th ultimo. We are glad to hear that the notion of sending them to Calcutta is abandoned, for the present, at all events. Two of them, however, are to be dispatched to Dum-Dum immediatelywhere they must be urgently required; otherwise they would have been allowed to remain where they are now until the cold weather. - Mofussilite, May 4.

THE LATE LIEUT. COL. ALEXANDER POPE, C.B.—The officers of the 10th light cavalry, to which regiment the late Lieut. col. Alexander Pope, c. B., belonged for twenty-five years, and in which he was highly respected, have determined on placing a tablet to the memory of the deceased, in the new church of St. Luke's Jullundhur, We have much reason for believing that the shameful attack on the military character of this officer, made in the Mofu! silite, by an anonymous correspondent, considerably increased the symptom's of Col. Pope's disease. has become of the Meerut editor's determination to unkennel that correspondent. Was all he said on the subject mere sound and fury, signifying nothing, when he indulged in the threat to publish the libeller by exposure?—Delhi Gazette.

FREE CHURCH OF CALCUTTA.—We are happy to announce that the Free Church of Calcutta intend establishing a new station with a school in the immediate vicinity of the Mallomed Mosin's college at Hooghly. It will be conducted, we understand, on a footing similar to its predecessor at Nimtollah, and will be opened in the month of August next. From the salubrious nature of the climate of the locality, the indefatigable labour and the unfading zeal of the learned and excellent missionaries in connexion with the aforesaid noble institution, we can confidently prognosticate that their hopes and efforts will certainly be realized, and crowned with eminent success in their new field of missionary labour. Connected with the excellent institution above alluded to, we are happy to mention there are two other The latter has branch schools at Bansbariah and Kulnah. already been accommodated and provided with a fine elegant and comfortable building fitted for the purpose; and the fermer, we have every reason to believe, will soon be furnished with a similar one, as among the other munificent and benevolent acts of Colonel Outram, we learn Dr. Duff has been made a rich present of 5,000 rupees, to be appropriated for purposes of charity, and therefore it may justly be hoped it will afford every feasible means towards the erection of a building for the branch school at Bansbariah. - Indian Times.

A FRIEND at Mooltan writes to say that the repairs of the fortifications are progressing rather slowly; but that the place is nevertheless again assuming a respectable appearance. Some of his friends think Gen. Cortlandt has not been well used by the omission of his name in all the Government notifications, especially in the one relating to the appointment of deputy commissioners- The following extract of a letter from the foreign secretary to the resident at Lahore will prove that those services have not been overlooked by the Governor-General:—
"The Secretary to the Government of India with the Governor-General, to Lieut. Col. Sir H. M. Lawrence, K.C.B. resident at Lahore. Camp, Ferozepore, Feb. 13 -In the general order of the Governor General, dated the 1st. inst., relating to the surrende. of Mooltan, his lordship, while thanking Major Edwardes and Lieut. Lake for the services rendered by the forces under their command, purposely omitted the name of Gen. Cortlandt, wishing to address him as an officer of the Maharaja of Lahore, through the resident. His lordship now desires that his thanks may be conveyed to Gen. Cortlandt for his conduct in connection with the force under Major Edwardes, and for the gallantry and firmness which he has evinced throughout all the operations in the Mooltan district and Derajat. You are requested to transmit the thanks of the Governor-General to Gen. Cortlandt, direct to himself."—Delhi Gazette.

THE ESTATE OF COCKERELL AND CO. - A first dividend of one per cent, on all approved claims on this estate is now payable at the office of the official assignee in Calcutta.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE ARTILLERY, DUM-DUM.-We have heard that the great objection, in reality, to the removal of the head-quarters of the artillery from Dum-Dum to a more convenient locality, is that the commandant has a very nice house at Dum-Dum. Supposing this to be the case (and we have heard it so often we are disposed to believe it), it becomes a question, whether the Government would not do wisely in purchasing the commandant's house, even at double its actual value, and thus remove the obstacle now in the way of the public weal. For the various detachments of artillery on this side of Benares to have to correspond with a head-quarters at Dum-Dum, is eminently ridiculous. Fancy the time that must elapse before a reply can be given to a communication despatched from Ferozepore, Lahore, or Peshawur! As soon as the Indus is navigated extensively, the artillery on this side of India will look to Bombay for ordnance stores, and thence they will doubtless be supplied. It is needless to be prolix on a matter of this kind. The position of Dum-Dum is quite sufficient to point out the absurdity of keeping it as the seat of artillery head-quarters—now that nearly all the Bengal artillery are upwards of a thousand miles distant. - Mofussilite, May 1.

LALL SINGH .- We have heard that an order from Government had arrived, directing the monthly allowance of Lall Singh to be stopped until further orders. Speculation is busy to assign a reason or discover a cause for this extraordinary order; but we have not heard any plausible conjecture as to the motive of Government in thus summarily depriving Lall Singh of his monthly pay. - Agra Messenger, May 12.

JHEELUM. May 4 .- A wing of the 20th regiment, two companies of the 69th, and two rissalahs of Tuit's horse, with two guns, start to-morrow morning with thirty lakhs of treasure for Rawul Pindee; but so far from its being a hardship at this time of the year, the trip is quite delightful, the weather being beautifully cool, and tents very comfortable. Blanket and ruzaee at night are necessary; in fact, it is quite a European climate. We have chosen a very good site for the cantonment, about half a mile from the town of Jhelum, and the houses are running up very fast. Another month will see us all housed, and I only hope they will allow us to remain our full time, for we all like it extremely.

Union Bank. - We observe by an advertisement in the Hurkaru, that the executive committee of the Union Bank propose to publish, on the first day of next month, separate lists exhibiting the names of shareholders who have paid or given security for their assessments, and of shareholders who, having made default, are not protected under the scheme of liquidation. The terms of the notification are somewhat significant. The reason assigned is that several "inquiries" have been recently made on the subject by the creditors of the bank; and it is to satisfy these anxious inquiries, all of which no doubt spring from the most amiable feelings and intentions on the part of the inquirers, that the general bulletin is to be given to the world.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

MOVEMENTS OF TROOPS.

Head Quarters, Simla, April 28, 1819 .- The order issued on the 31st ult. by Major-gen. Sir W. R. Gilbert, K.C B., commanding field force on service, directing the following arrangements for the march of certain corps to their destination, is, with the sanction of the right honourable the Governor-General, confirmed.

Her Majesty's 14th light dragoons and 12th irregular cavalry to march on the 3rd inst. under command of Lieut .- col. J. W. King, of the former corps.

The 4th troop 2nd brigade of horse artillery, the 5th company of pioneers, 2nd European regiment, and 30th and 56th native infantry, to march on the 4th inst. under command of Brigadier N. Penny, C.B.

Her Majesty's 61st regiment to remain at Peshawar, and her Majesty's 53rd regiment to take place at Rawul Pindee.

The 31st and 70th regiments of native infantry to remain at Peshawur, until further orders.

The staff and establishments of the Bengal division not required with the Bengal troops left at Peshawur, to accompany Brigadier Penny's brigade.

The 30th and 56th regiments of native infantry to be attached to the 2nd brigade of the force; and her Majesty's 60th rifles and the 31st and 70th regiments of native infantry to the last brigade.

RE-APPOINTMENT OF COL. DOUGLAS TO BANK OF BRIGADIER-GENERAL.

Head Quarters, Simla, April 30, 1849.—With the senction of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, his Excellency the Right Honourable the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to direct that the whole of the troops at Peshawur shall be considered as one force, and regarded precisely the same as troops of different arms serving together in any district in the provinces.

The rank of Brigadier-General, conferred on Colonel the Hon. H. Dundas, c.B., of her Msjesty's 60th rifles, in General Orders of the 27th January last, is resumed, and he will, until further orders, command the district of Peshawur (a dependency of the Penjab division) as a brigadier of the lat class, with a major of brigade as his staff-officer; retaining, however, for the present, the superintending surgeon, the commissary of ordnance, the deputy judge advocate-general, and the whole of the engineer and commissariat officers, belonging to the Bombay presidency, who are now serving with the Peshawur force. All other staff-officers of the Bombay column are permitted to return to their respective duties at their own presidency. The whole of the artillery of both presidencies remaining at Peshawur is to be formed into an artillery division, under the command of a senior officer of that branch, with an adjutant for the staff duties of the division.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

Fort William, Home Department, May 7, 1849. — The honourable the Court of Directors, having in a Dispatch, dated 7th March last, announced to the Government of India that they had appointed General Sir Charles James Napier, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Honourable Military Order of the Bath, to be Commander-in-Chief of the East India Company's Porces in India, and an Extraordinary Member of the Council of India, and having forwarded copies of the Commissions for these ap-, pointments to the Government of India, and the said Commissions prescribing that the said General Sir Charles James Napier is to take upon him the Command-in-Chief and office of Extraordinary Member of the Council of India, " upon and from his assumption of the command of her Majesty's forces in the East Indies," and the said General Sir Charles James Napier having informed the Honourable the President of the Council of India in Council, that he assumed the Command of Her Majesty's Forces in the East Indies on this date, it is hereby notified that General Sir Charles James Napier has assumed the office of Commander-in-Chief of the Forces of the East India Company in India, and that be has this day taken his seat and the oaths as an Extraordinary Member of the Council of India under the usual salute from the ramparts of Fort William.

SIR CHARLES JAMES NAPIER, G.C.B.

Fort William, May 7, 1849.-No. 178 of 1849.-His Excellency General Sir Charles James Napier, Knight Grand Cross of the most honourable military order of the Bath, having been appointed by the Honourable the Court of Directors, in their letter in the public department, dated the 7th of March, 1849, to be Commander-in-Chief of the East India Company's forces in India, and also to be an Extraordinary Member of the Council of India, which appointments are to take effect upon and from his assuming the command of her Majesty's forces in the East Indies, and the said General Sir Charles James Napier, having now informed the Honourable the President in Council that he assumed the command of her Majesty's forces in the East Indies, on this date, the Honourable Court's orders and the commissions appointing General Sir Charles James Napier are now read.

The oaths of office being administered to General Sir Charles James Napier, his Excellency takes his seat as a member of the Council of India under the usual salute from the ramparts of Fort Ordered, that the appointment of General Sir Charles James Napier be communicated to the army in general orders, and that the commission constituting his Excellency Commander-in-Chief be read with the usual ceremonies to the troops in garrison and at the different stations of the army.

Ordered, that all returns of the army be made, in the usual manner, to General Sir Charles James Napier, as Commander-in-Chief.

SIR CHARLES JAMES NAPIER'S ADDRESS.

Fort William, May, 7.-1. Her Majesty having been graciously pleased to nominate General Sir Charles James Napier, G.C.B. to be Commander in Chief of all her Majesty's forces serving in the East Indies, and the honourable the Court of Directors having appointed him to the command of the honourable Company's forces in India from his assumption of the foregoing appointment, he deems it right thus to announce in general orders, that he this day assum the duties of his command, with the concurrence of his honour the President in council.

- 2. General Sir Charles James Napier, in thus assuming the command in consequence of the Right Honourable Lord Gough's period of service having ended, cannot do so without directing that the honours hitherto paid to this distinguished nobleman be continued to him by those armies at whose head he has gained so many victories.
- 3. To the Queen's and Company's armies Sir Charles James Napier has only to express the pride he feels at once mose serving with them, and the pleasure with which he heard, on reaching the east, that at Goojerat they had added a fresh victory to their annals, and a new conquest to our empire.
- 4. All reports, returns and correspondence relative to her Majesty's and the honourable Company's forces, are to be sent to the heads of the various military departments, as usual.
- 5. The Commander-in-Chief will proceed in a few days to join the army in the north, and will inform the adjutant general of the army when he leaves Calcutta, in order that any communication of importance requiring his Excellency's immediate decision, may be forwarded to meet him on the march.
- 6. The Commander-in-Chief will receive the heads of departments, on public business, from ten to twelve o'clock, A.M. any day of the week, council days and Sundays excepted.
- 7. His Excellency will be happy to receive all officers and gentlemen who may wish to see him on Mondays and Thursdays, from twelve until two o'clock.
- 8. In cases of public emergency, the Commander-in-Chief may be seen on any day and at any hour.

MADRAS.

THE MADRAS GOVERNMENT AND THE MAINTENANCE OF CASTE.

We observe in the columns of the Madras Crescent a notice of a practice on the part of the Government of that presidency, which appears to strike so directly at the root of all true Christianity in this country, that we are compelled to offer a few observations on it. The passage alluded to is the following:—

"If a convert renounces caste he renders his children ineligible to receive a liberal education: for they will be admitted neither at Patcheapah's Institution, nor the Madras University; and he, as well as they, is compelled to forego all hopes of rising to the level of castemen in the service of the Government. In the medical subordinate service they can get no higher than dressers; and in civil employ, they have only the lowest stations open to them. As for instance: the son of an ordained minister was refused a place in the Trichinopoly Court-house, for want of caste; and the refusal was sanctioned by the Government. Another convert applied for a situation in the court at Cuddalore, and obtained it, because he had not forfeited his caste."

It is, of course, too well known that some of those who established Christian missions in Southern India unhappily allowed themselves to be betrayed into a sanction of the distinction of caste among the converts, and their successors have always found it a most difficult question to cope with, and apparently not possessing the moral courage to inflict a momentary wound on the well-being of their missions, by abrogating the institution, they have allowed the evil to go on increasing in virulence till the present time. It is hardly necessary at this day to put forward elaborate arguments upon the irreconcilable antagonism which exists between the precepts of the religion we profess, and the institution of caste. Those who encourage its observance would doubtless repel with indignation an assertion, that all were not equal in the sight of God; but the secular inconveniences which accompany it are not among its least evils. Caste is, and has been, the greatest evil which a magnificent priestcraft has inflicted upon India. It forms an insuperable bar to any permanent improvement in the condition of the people, while at the same time it extinguishes many of the most ordinary sources of enlightenment. The baneful institution intrudes itself into every relation of life; certain descriptions of food must not be touched-a source of endless vexation, and no marriage can be contracted beyond the pale of the husband's caste, - a custom in itself most dangerous to morality-while the extreme elevation it gives to one class of the community, and the debasement of the other, tends to create that most execrable of all tyrannies, a priestly despotism. It sows dissension in every house and discord in every family; but it is needless to recapitulate the long train of evils which have long been felt and acknowledged by every European and every intelligent Native in India, and which is so obnoxious to the present generation that the stricter obligations of the caste are already in abeyance. We doubt, moreover, the possibility of making the incomprehensible amalgam of caste and Christianity, religious freedom and mental bondage, which is implied in the retention of caste among Christians. We are aware that great retention of caste among Christians. efforts have been made to maintain the distinction, by refusing a Sudra admittance to the ordinance, till after a Brahman has partaken of it, and by appointing a full Brahman to administer the rite, but by the laws of the shasters, an infidel, whether Christian or otherwise, cannot be a Brahman, cannot even be a Sudra. The mysterious bond that has fettered the energies of India for twenty centuries is broken by admission to the baptismal font. There is scarcely a pundit, in Bengal at least, who will not at once admit that the man who cannot conscientiously perform the morning poojah is no Hindoo, and that none but a Hindoo can possess caste. We know that differences of opinion as to what constitutes a breach of caste prevail among the learned, but we never heard of any one who admitted Christians to a communion in its privileges.

On the first perusal of the above extract from the Crescent, we thought that our contemporary's information, usually so good on such subjects, had failed him, as we could scarcely believe it possible that so invidious and so impolitic a distinction would be maintained by a Government professedly Christian, and with the sanction of a governor of such enlightened views. It appears very anomalous that while the Government at home is endeavouring to remove all religious disabilities, and even incurring hatred by its liberality, the Government of Madras should lend its sanction to an attempt to fetter in the bonds of mental servility those who are but newly released from the dominion of superstition, and should declare itself the foe of that progress towards liberty of which each individual member is personally so determined a supporter. How absurd, in the present age, would it be to forbid individuals to hold office or appointment, who could not show thirty-two quarterings, yet this is precisely the essence of caste. We are convinced that if the subject is fairly put before the Madras Government, it will at once abrogate this distinction, and admit all men, Hindoos as well as Christians, and Christian Sudras, as well as Christian Bramins, to an equal participation of offices, on the sole ground of personal merit.-Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SMALL CAUSE COURT.—A correspondent of the Madras Spectator furnishes a curious, though we fear a too common exemplification of the working of the Small Cause Court at that Presidency. In a case for the recovery of 28 rupees, the costs amounted to 147 rupees; that is, the costs were rather more than five times the value of the debt. The writer pleads for an extension of the Petty Court to such an extent as should enable it to perform the functions of a Small Cause Court, but with greater celerity and less expense. Those who choose to amuse themselves with the game of law must, of course, pay for the indulgence, but still some little respect for the property of the lieges is advisable, and we should think that a Court on the plan of the English County Courts, modified to meet the circumstances of the country, would confer a permanent benefit on the community.

THE NEWAUB BEGUM.—The Madras Spectator announces the death of Her Highness the Nawaub Begum, mother to His Highness the present Nawaub of the Carnatic.

THE MADRAS UNIVERSITY BOARD.—We hear that the Hon. Daniel Elliot, Esq. will shortly be appointed president of the Madras University Board, with the Advocate-General as vice-president. Sir Vansittart Stonehouse, Bart., Sir H. C. Montgomery, Bart., Capt. J. J. Losh, and V. Cunniah Chetty, are a few of the names mentioned to fill the vacant governorships. Mr. Walter Elliot would have also been nominated, but for his approaching departure to the provinces. As soon as the Board is complete, it is said that the Right Hon. the Governor will lay his educational measures before them.

H. M.'s 25TH REGT.—On the arrival of the two companies of H. M.'s 25th Regiment from Calcutta, expected every day, it is in contemplation to send three companies of that corps to be located at Poonamallee, in consequence of the over-crowded state of the barracks in the fort, which detachment will be relieved quarterly by the same corps, thus giving the whole regiment the benefit of a country residence at least three months in the season.

Da. WRIGHT, the superintendent of the cotton experiments at Coimbatore, published last year, in the Madras Spectator, a circular letter, soliciting information with a view to the elucidation of a discovery he believed he had made, as to the proper time for sowing the seed of the American cotton plant in this country. He has now come forward with another "circular," in which he avers that the grand difficulty to be contended with is, "a diminishing, instead of a rising, temperature during the cultivation season," and suggests that, as a means of overcoming this obsta-cle, the cultivator should adopt the plan of "employing the earlier weeks of the antumnal period as our spring, the latter ones and part of winter as our summer, and the conclusion of winter and part of spring as our autumn." And Dr. Wight is sanguine that, by the pursuance of this course, accompanied by proper attention to the selection and preparation of the soil, &c., the farmer might insure "as certain and uniform success in growing American cotton, as now attends the cultivation of the indigenous plant."

TRICHINOPOLY. - The recent order of Government, dated the 17th ultimo, detailing the manner rents of houses at all military stations are to be determined, has given much satisfaction, for strange enough, although there is one regiment of cavalry, one company of European artillery, one regiment of European, and two of Native Infantry, located in garrison here, yet a cantonment has never been marked out. This, as you may imagine, led the proprietors of the houses-mostly natives-to revel in the delights of high and unreasonable rents, which have been in vain appealed against to the collector, whose ideas in these matters appear to have been somewhat crooked, and whose removal is hailed with delight. The same order makes it compulsory for landlords to cut down the hedges around their compounds to within four feet, and you may suppose how requisite this was, when some of them had shot up to twelve and fourteen feet The Brigndier's example, in commencing with the pruning-knife, has stimulated others most beneficially; still, there is a quantity of prickly pear jungle about the place which might advantageously for health be entirely cut down, dug out, and hurnt, the only way to kill the plant effectually. The road fund is now under the management of the judge, who does not allow the convicts to doze away their time; and to his exertions are we indebted for many of the improvements made in the highways.

CAPTURE OF THE PRETENDER APPA SAHIB, AND COMPLETE DEFEAT OF HIS FOLLOWERS.

Authentic intelligence reached Hingolee on the 11th instant, that the head quarters of that division of the Nizam's army, under Brigadier Hampton, had come up with, and captured the imposter calling himself Appa Sahib, on the 6th instant, at a place called Gowree, fourteen marches from Hingolee, after a severe engagement with his followers, amounting to upwards of 300 Robillas. They were a portion of the enemy that had on the 30th April been so roughly handled by the Ellichpore troops under the late Brigadier Onslow, and were making the best of their way to occupy the fort of Lahore. Fortunately they were intercepted and brought to action before reaching their destina-tions. The loss on the part of the Nizam's troops amounted to five European officers, and two duffadars and seven sowars of the 2nd cavalry, with many of their horses, wounded, out of 120 sabres engaged; whilst that of the enemy is stated to be 105 killed, 50 wounded, and 100 taken prisoners, the pretender being amongst the latter, having received two swordcuts on the head and one on the right leg. The force marched between forty and fifty miles on the night previous to the engagement, the cavalry in advance (with whom were brigadier Hampton and his staff) and came unawares upon the enemy, who were lying about and taken by surprise. On their refusal to surrender as prisoners, the word was given to charge, when a very san-guinary hand-to-hand contest ensued, the Rohillas fight-ing like bull-dogs, and with all the despair of doomed men; and the 2nd cavalry nobly sustained the honour of the service to which they belong. An eye-witness states that their charge was a most brilliant affair in which the whole of the European officers of the force joined. The infantry were too exhausted to follow up the pursuit of the enemy, and they got away to the jungle with their treasure, Rs. 15,000, on a camel. The flank companies of the 2nd (Russell's) Nizam's infantry did good service in the thick brushwood growing in the vicinity of the battle-field, whereby many Robillas were killed, wounded, The names of the European officers or taken prisoners. or taken prisoners. The names of the European officers wounded in this gallant and well-managed affair are — Brigadier Hampton, dangerously, sword cut through the ankle; Major Lysaght, ditto, in the knee—the joint cut deeply into; Captain Commandant Yates, severely—sabre cuts over the head, shoulders, and arms; Captain Orr, slightly, in the arm and Lieut. Harrison, ditto, in the leg. It was at first supposed that the two former would each have been childed to have hundergone amountation of the wounded leg. obliged to have fundergone amputation of the wounded leg, but at latest dates they had much improved, and it was hoped the limbs might be saved. Lieut. Robinson, of the 7th Bombay N.I., who was on leave at Hingolee when the force took the field, accompanied it as an amateur, and, with Dr. McEgan, is mentioned as having behaved most gallantly in the fight-these two gentlemen having joined in the charge of the cavalry, and cut down a number of the enemy. The horse of the latter was severely wounded. The whole affair was most brilliant, and reflects the highest credit on Brigadier Hampton and the officers and native troops under his command; and they no doubt will, as they deserve, receive the special thanks of Government for having secured one who has for a long time past been the fruitful source of mischiefs and crime. The Hingolee force was on its return to cantonments, having the soi-disant rajah of Nagpore, and several of his followers, as close prison-The whole of the Aurungabad division are in ers, in its train the field, having been called upon by Brig. Beatson to aid him in disposing of some refractory mercenaries in his neighbourhood. The Julnah subsidiary force had also received orders to hold themselves in readiness to move at a moment's notice. was a bazar rumour current at this station that all the officers of the 7th regt. had either been killed or wounded, and their names were even given, but we sincerely trust this may turn out to be nothing more than a confused native report of the affair already related.—Bombay Times.

MISCELLANEOUS.

VISCOUNT FALKLAND.—The Poonah Chronicle mentions that an individual, Gayasoodeen Muftee, is about to publish a work, intended "to extol and explain the value of the Right H on. Viscount Falkland, Governor of Bombay." The book will probably be extremely amusing, and well worthy the attention of Persian scholars, as it will doubtless contain every epithet of courtesy, flattery, and bombast which that language can supply. We hope Gayasoodeen Muftee will not go unrewarded for this meritorious display of erudition.

WE have received the following from one of the columns of General Gilbert's force, returning to Peshawur: Bukerala Pass, 20th April. Penny's brigade (2nd Europ. 30th and 56th) arrived here this morning in progress to their respective destinations. The weather is most delightful for the 20th of April, a great coat being still indispensable on the march. Hitherto our marches have been comfortably short, averaging about nine miles per day; we start early, and generally manage to arrive at our ground about half an hour after sunrise. left Rawul Pindee on the 16th inst., and shall arrive at Jhelum the day after to-morrow; we cross that river in the steamer the day after to-morrow; we cross that five in the which is now there; this will be a novelty for the Jack Sepoys, which is now there; this will be a novelty for the Jack Sepoys, which is now there; this will be a novelty for the Jack Sepoys, from thence to Lahore in four marches, vid Wuzeerabad. had anticipated some delay this morning, at the steep descent of the pass, but owing to the judicions arrangement made for keepthe pass, but owing to the judicions arrangement made for keeping the road clear of baggage, we experienced none whatever, but bowled down the hill at a good speed; an experienced officer with a guard was posted at the top of the hill, with strict orders to allow 'no baggage of any description to precede the column, excepting that of the European regiment, because, as the brigade order expressly stated, 'the comfort of the European regiment because, as the brigade order expressly stated, 'the comfort of the European soldier must be cared for.'

THE LATE MAJOR ELDRED POTTINGER.—A very chaste and beautiful monument has been erected in the Bombay Cathedral to the memory of the late Major Eldred Pottinger, the defender of Herst.

JEFFERHOY DADABHOY. — We hear, with much regret, of the death, on the 12th of May, of Jecjeebhoy Dadabhoy, Esq., one of the oldest Parsee merchants of the place. He had been suffering for some months from disease of the stomach, and this was no doubt aggravated by the influence of mental anxiety, arising from heavy losses in husiness. He was upwards of sixty years of age. Having been broker to several European houses, he was well known to the mercantile community of the island, as well as to the extensive circle of native traders with whom he had transactions. Jeejeebhoy has by his will made the noble bequest of two lacs of rupees to be applied to charitable purposes, amongst his countrymen. The money, we hear, is by the terms of the will, to be invested in Company's paper, in the names of eight trustees, four of whom are to be his own sons, and the others to be chosen by these latter. We presume it will be chiefly employed in the support of indigent and infirm Parsees.—Courier.

The Board of Education have the following arrangements in contemplation, on the retirement of Professor Harkness from the post of principal of the Elphinstone Institution. The superintendent of the Poonah Sanscrit College to be principal, on a salary of Rs. 700 per month. The professorship of general literature, formerly combined in the person of the principal, to be conferred on Mr. Reid, who will receive an addition of Rs. 180 or thereabouts to his present stipend. Mr. Green of Surat to be superintendent of the Poona Sanscrit College, vice Major Candy. The place of Mr. Green to be supplied by Mr. Graham, now master in the Elphinstone Institution.—Ibid.

LETTERS of the 15th of May, from Mahabuleshwur inform us that the Right Honourable the Governor has determined on a visit of a couple of days' duration to Sattara, for which place his lordship is to start on the 30th instant. Brigadier-General Manson was about leaving immediately for Poona. The weather had again become cool and delightful.

SATTABA. — Though the proclamation annexing Sattars to the British dominions has not yet been published, we observe in last Government Gazette the names of the commissioner and his three assistants, who are in future to administer its affairs. As formerly stated, Mr. H. B. E. Frere has been appointed commissioner; with Mr. M. A. Coxon, C.S.; Lieutenant H. B. Sandford, of the artillery; and Ensign J. T. Nicholson, of the 23rd N. L. I., as first, second, and third assistants respectively.—E. F. Danvers, Esq., junior magistrate of police, has been allowed to proceed to Egypt for six months on urgent private affairs. Mr. L. C. C. Rivett will, we presume, act for him during his absence,—the place of third magistrate of police being it is said to be held by Mr. R. F. Barra during the period the last-named gentleman may be otherwise employed.—Bombay. Times.

THE TRIAL OF MODIRAY is now in progress at Lahore, and it appears in the last degree unlikely that he should have been put on his defence by the authorities if there had been any reasonable chance or probability of the case "breaking down." We are far from thinking it likely that perfect fair play will not be accorded him—on the other hand, should there seem any ground, however slight, to warrant the entertainment of a doubt, of the doubt he will have the benefit: but we feel very confident that had there been the slightest reason to suspect the existence of a ground for doubt, Moolraj would never have been brought to trial to have the chance of a triumph given to an acquittal. What the punishment may be, will depend on the accessories or aggravations to the offence. The trial is very properly an open one, so that the nature of the evidence will at once become known. - Ibid.

PAUNCHGUNNY .- Now that Sattara is an integral portion of our empire, we trust that the expediency of creating Paunchgunny into a sanitary station will be recommended. Here, at an altitude of no more than 500 feet lower than Malcolm Peth, in a beautiful country, with abundance of supplies all around, Europeans may reside all the year round with the utmost comfort. The rain, which at Malcolm Peth falls to the depth of above 20 feet in three months, does not at Paunchgunny, ten miles off, amount to 15 inches. Sir George Arthur carefully examined the ground for himself, but the Sattara Rajah stood in the way, and the matter was deferred. Now is the time for opening it up anew, when the whole region around has just become our own.

H.M.'s 64TH Foot.—The ships Java and John Brewer, having on board detachments of H.M.'s 64th foot, have arrived at Bombay.

REVISED MEDICAL CODE, -A revised edition of the Code of Regulations for the Medical Branch of the Bombay Army, has been prepared and directed to be brought into use from the 1st

UMRITSIR.—By the last accounts from Umritsir, Colonel M'Sherry, the Commandant at Govindgurh, was about to leave that place for Simlah. Another Lieut.-colonel, in whom Government had great confidence, would, it was said, be appointed forthwith to his regiment, and would succeed him at Govindgurh. The state of the city and surrounding country was not improving under the Civil Government. The Commissioner and Deputy-Commissioner were absent, and all official matters were in the hands of a couple of young civilians, who were actually entertaining Sikhs as Policemen and Chuprasses, and serving out to them confiscated arms which had been deposited in the fortress of Govindgurh. Several robberies had occurred. On the 25th April no fewer than three took place in the city. Two days afterwards fifty hackeries were plundered at a place about 12 miles from Umritsir, and one of the Garee-wans was brought into Govindgurh murdered, and two others severely wounded. On the 29th, a sepoy belonging to the Sappers and Miners was brought in, badly hurt, from a place on the high road to Jullundhur, where he had been attacked with thirteen comrades, who were escorting their baggage to Wuzeerabad. These instances of marauding say little for the honesty of our new subjects—in whatever way they may illustrate their byalty!—Bombay Telegraph and Courier, May 14, MISCELLANEA.—Col. M. White, C.B., H. M.'s 3rd dragoons, has been appointed a brigadier of the second class, in room of Brigadier A. Campbell, c.B. and K.H., H. M.'s 9th Lancers, who is about proceeding to England.—Assist. surg. A. Bell, formerly surgeon to the Governor General, has been appointed to succeed Dr. Leckie in the residency surgeoncy at Lucknow, Assist surg. A. Grant filling the post vacated by Dr. Bell.— Capt. W. C. Erskine, of the 73rd N.I., has succeeded Capt. D. Ross as superintendent of Jaloun.—The Calcutta Gazette of the 5th inst. announces the appointment of Capt. J. Ramsay, H. M.'s 22nd regt. to be first a.-d.-c. to the Governor General; and that of Lieut. H. O. Mayne, 6th M. L.C., adjutant 4th Nizem's cavalry, to be an a.d.-c. on his lordship's personal staff, vice Col. A. S. H. Mountain, 29th foot, appointed adjutant-general of the Constant of Assistant to the General Superistra artay.--The appointment of Assistant to the General Superintenant of Operations for the suppression of Thuggee at Lucknow, and Superintendent of the Oudh Frontier Police, has been conferred on Lieut. G. R. Weston, 65th Bengal N.I. vice Capt. G. E. Hollings. We begin to think that the Bombay army has many very grave grounds of complaint against the Bombay newspapers for the coolness with which their interests are advocated, and the indifference with which their welfare is regarded, unless in so far their prosperity accords with that of the State. For ourselves we candidly confess that our principle is that the welfare of those served should take precedence of that of their servants; that the overned ought to be the first care of the Government; and that, if public duty can be better or more economically performed by the troops of one presidency taan by those of another, to these ought it to be assigned. Not so seem to think the majurity of our Madras and Bengal contemporaries; and so soon as the services of either are supposed to be forgotten, or their rights encroached upon, no matter with what advantage to the commonwealth, straightway we have a grievance. The main argument for the annexation of the Punjab seems throughout to have been that it would secure an augmentation to the Bengal army. Had the country of the Five Rivers lain to the westward instead of the northward, and been to be guarded by Bombay troops, who alone were to have had the benefit of an increase, mere annexation or not would have been matter of mighty little consequence. Our good brother of Delhi is, we observe, about to give us some chapters of lamentation over the calamity of a Bombay commanding officer with a Bombay staff at Peshawur. It is the staff part that seems the grievance. Had Brigadier-General Dundas had a Bengal staff, we have no doubt that they would have been found to work to admiration. We never heard any of our N.W. brethren complain of the various Bengal officers holding valuable appointments in Scinde after it was taken charge of by a Bombay commissioner, and had for years been occupied by Bombay troops; and we think our own more immediate friends had good cause to complain that the Bombay journals found no fault. In reality the state seemed very well served, and we have too great an aversion to the advo-cacy of class interests to interfere. Now came the Madras civi-lians with a fearful grievance, that all the loaves and fishes of the north are gobbled by the Qui Hies-the troubled waters of the five rivers afford nothing to the benighted. The poor ducks again are once more left to suffer in silence—no one takes up their quarrel-Sattara is the only good thing they have got amidst all the recent troubles and turmoil. We must endeavour to be of good cheer however; a local contemporary assures us of the speedy conquest of Egypt; to be collector at Grand Cairo, or sessions judge at Thebes and Alexandria, would be something worthy of ambition. - Bombay Times.

MARKETS.

BOMBAY, MAY 19. GENERAL REMARKS.—The interval which has clapsed since the departure of the last mail has been so short, and there has been so departure of the last mail has been so short, and there has been so few importations of staple articles, that any great amount of business could not be looked for. Our season, besides, is now fast approaching to a close: to Kurrachee and Persia the despatch of goods has already ceased, but to Marwar and Goozerat the trade still continues pretty active.—Money continues abundant.—Government Securities are fully as firm as at the departure of last mail.— In Bank Shares no alteration has taken place, if we except Agra's, which have risen still higher, say two per cent. since last advices, one per cent. premium having been given for a few.

Cotton Piece Goods.—There has not been a single arrival of these fabrics, and the market is again bare of both Grey and Bleached, which continue in demand. Grey Shirtings fully maintain their former rates, except those above 64 reed, which have slightly de-Grey Madapollams scarce, and if on the spot would realise advanced prices. Grey Jacconnets scarce, and command full prices.

Bleached Shirtings and Jacconets have declined from their late extreme prices. Salin Spols are in steady demand.—DYRD GOODS.
Turkey Red Plain Cloth scarce and much wanted. Twilled rather dull, as also Prints, except those of first quality.

The present Sultan of Jahore, who is at present at Malacca, has been lately treating with various parties for the sale of a portion of his territories. His first negotiations, we understand, were with Mr. Tocksing, but they went off on some point or other. Since then, we are informed, certain arrangements have been made or proposed by the Resident Councillor at Malacca, for the cession by the Sultan, to the East-India Company, of the district of Muar, lying on the southern boundary of our Malacca territory. The country is described to be generally a beautiful level plain, with a rich soil, admirably adapted in many places for paddy and other cultivation. It also abounds in tin, which if properly worked, would yield a large revenue to Government. The acquisition of this country would also give the command of the river Muar up to Mount Ophir, including the districts in which the gold mines are situated. At present the navigation of the Muar is by no means safe, the river being infested by gangs of robbers, and the exactions of the petty Malay chiefs, who dwell upon its banks, are so intolerable, that the trade between Malacca and Ulm Muar is almost extinct, although with proper protection it could not fail to be considerable. - Singapore Free Press, March 15.

SINDE.

On Monday the 26th regiment entertained Mr. Pringle and General Auchmuty, together with all the élile of the station. They kept up the hilarity of the entertainment until the small hours. This day they entertain a large party at tiffin, to arrange about getting up some sport in the racing line. We understand this gallant corp, or the staff (we cannot positively say which), are to give a ball on the 24th instant. We are glad to see Young Egypt is again emerging from its lethargy. A performance, we are told, is to take place to night at the theatre, by the officers of the station.

—Kurrachee Advertiser, May 9.

YESTERDAY, about six o'clock in the morning, a brig was signalled, which turned out to be the hon. Company's vessel Palinurus, Lieut. Grieve in command. She is, we believe, lately from the coast of Arabia, where she has been surveying since she left this harbour about six weeks ago. There is also a cutter and tender, and we believe they will now remain with us for the next four or five months, or till the end of the monsoon. Such a fleet will doubtless add much to the gaiety of the place.—Ibid.

A river steamer, the Planet, Captain Fenner in command, arrived at Gizree on the 9th from Kotree. It will be recollected that we experienced a sharp storm in our harbour on the first of this month; about the same time the weather was most extraordinary about Kotree and Hydrabad; and on the coast of Arabia there was a severe gale on the 28th of last month, in which many native craft were sufferers. So severe was the storm at Muscat, and so violent the rain, that houses were thrown down, and several persons drowned in the torrents which had accumulated in the streets. We believe the surveying vessels now in the harbour came in for their share of the squall, if so it may be called. They passed the commodore's ship in the gale.—Ibid., May 12.

Gaiety is breaking forth in earnest. General Auchmuty, and the civil and military bachelor staff of the station, have issued cards of invitation to a ball and supper in honour of her Majesty's birthday. This will, we understand, be followed up by other festivities in the way of plays, fancy balls, &c. There is a report in circulation that Mr. Shelley's return may be expected immediately, with a cargo of ice, which will be highly acceptable on the above occasion.—Itid.

On the 14th the Honourable Company's river steamer Planet, Captain Fenner, quitted Gizree for up the river. Capt. Hardinge, Persian interpreter to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, departs by this opportunity.—Ibid., May 16.

Kurracher, May 7th, 1849.—As you ask for notices regarding meteors, here is one for you. Yesterday evening (May 6th), at 6:45, a meteor fell here. When first observed, it was at an elevation of about 25° or 30°, and appeared to be falling from the zenith to a point of the horizon a little to the eastward of north, where it vanished, at an elevation of about 5°, without any appearance of explosion, and I should say that it fell below my horizon in a perfect state. I cannot say that I saw it from the commencement of its course, as I was observing something else at the moment intently when it attracted my notice at the elevation above mentioned. It had the appearance of a clear ball of fire, with a slight green tinge, and was considerably larger than Venus when at her brightest. Had it occurred an hour later, it would have presented a splendid appearance, but as the sun had only just set, it was still broad daylight. The day had been hot and sultry, but at the time alluded to there was a cool breeze from the N.W., with a clear sky.

SIAM.

The year 1848 has been characterized as one of rebellions. Although Siam occupies but a small place in the family of nations, yet she has not escaped. In the early part of March, news reached Bangkok that the Chinese on the Tachin river, about a day's travel S. west of the capital, had arisen in rebellion. The king immediately despached Phya Maha Tep with a few policement to suppress the rebels. As Maha Tep drew near their rendezvous, he and his men were fired upon, and himself mortally wounded. Maha Tep was carried back to Bangkok, and died a few day's after. The king now sent the Phra Klang and his sons, with a few other officers, and a large body of soldiers, with orders to put an end to the rebellion at all hazards. In about three weeks' time, the Phra Klang and his men succeeded in quelling them. The leader of the rebels, and about 300 men were shot or killed by other means, and some 200 brought to the king's palace in irons.

It is said only a part of those who were killed were really guilty, and of the prisoners who were brought to the capital only some 35 were found guilty and kept in irons.

The Phra Klana and his men had returned to the capital, but a short time before information reached the palace that the Chimes, at Petriu, on the Bangplakong river, about two days' travel east of the capital had risen in rebellion. It was soon ascertained that several wealthy Chinese had joined this rebellion, and the fort at Petriu had been taken by them. The Government was much alarmed at this, and the King sent the Phra Klang and his sons, with some other officers and several thousand soldiers, to take the fort, and put down the rebellion.

It appears that the fort fell into the hands of the insurgents in this way: Pova Bodin, Commander-in-Chief of the army in Siam, having closed the border war with the Cochin-Chinese, as out on his return to Bangkok. The governor of the fort and diagrated of Petriu hearing of the return of Poya Bodin, went with his servants to meet him. Soon after leaving the fort, the Chinese arose and took it. Report says that there were 100 piculs of game, powder, six cannon, and a quantity of small arms in the fort.

With all these advantages, it was supposed they would have stood a long siege before yielding. But on the arrival of the Commander-in-Chief, and the Phra Klang, with their men, they united their forces and stormed the fort. The rebels made but a feeble resistance, and the fort was soon retaken. The governor of the fort was killed in taking it; but, when the Siamese got possession, the work of death commenced. It is generally reported that 10,000 Chinese were killed in the district of Petriu. But this is probably an over-estimate, and it would perhaps be more connect to say that about 2,000 were killed. Some 500 Chinese were captured, and brought to Bangkok in irons. This rebellion continued about a month, and during that time thirteen sugar-mills and other property, to the amount of a million of dollars, was destroyed.

The greater part of the prisoners brought in from Petriu were finally set free, and in the two rebellions only eleven suffered capital punishment. How many of the prisoners were really put to death it is difficult to say, as one of the high officers connected with the trials received bribes, and many escaped punishment. The king, on learning of these bribes, condemned the officer to death, but through the intercession of friends, the punishment of death was

We are happy to announce the establishment of another machine shop in Bangkok. It has been built by Nai Mot, son of a Siamese nobleman. This man has shown much skill and good taste in making and arranging the tools for his shop. He has received some assistance from the individual who aided the Prince in establishing his. An engine-lathe has been built under the superintendence of this person for the use of the shop, which would do honour to any similar establishment in Europe or America. Nai Mot has made some improvements in the electrotype the past year, which, if known abroad, would do him much honour. These improvements are a source of encouragement, and we hope the Siamese will not only improve in mechanics but in religion.—Ibid.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

Captain Ouchterlony, in a memoir of a survey of the Neilgherry Mountains, gives the following particulars respecting their inhabitants:—

"The utmost obscurity hangs over the early history of the Neilgherry-hills, for, beyond the period of the immigration of the "Todars" or "Todawars," tradition amongst the present inhabitants affords no clue whatever to trace That they have been in former ages inhabited, and that by a very peculiar race, evidence sufficient to show is furmished by the existence of the numerous "cairns" or rude tombs found upon summits of almost all the loftier mountains in every part of the hills, the origin of which is so remote, that the Tedars, recognized as the most ancient inhabitants, have no tracition amongst themselves bequeathed by their ancestors which even guides us to a surmise, as to the race of people by whom they were constructed. As affording thus almost the only landmarks by which speculation as to the ancient state of this remarkable region can be guided, these "cairns" seem to merit a brief description. They are invariably situated, as has been already mentioned, on the highest summits of the hills, sometimes single, but more frequently in groups or rows of from three to six. They are circular in form, raised with large unhewn blooks of stone four feet or more above the level of the ground, and ranying in diameter from twelve or fifteen feet to twenty five or thirty. The interior is hollowed out to some depth below the ofiginal surface, usually until the solid rock is reached, and the apace thus cleared filled with earthen pots, with the covers strongly luted on, pieces of bone, charcoal, and fragments of pottery, all tightly packed in a soil so black and finely pulverized, as to give cause to suppose it to be decomposed animal matter. On breaking these pots or urns, which many of them are in the form of, they are found to contain ashes, charcoal, and pieces of half-calcined bones, with sometimes a small quantity of a pure scentless fluid, which, in two instances, I found to be pure water slightly impregnated with lime. Images of tigers, elks, bisons, leopards, and some domestic animals, pieces of decomposed bronze, resembling spear heads, tripods, &c., are also found occasionally, mixed with the other remains; but it is a singular fact that on breaking up the strong pavement of slabs of stone with which the cairns " are covered in, and mining down until a second pavement is come upon, which, from its brightness and weight has, to all appearance, never been disturbed since it was first laid, we and on removing it that the contents of the vault below, instead of being laid in the order befitting the repose of consecrated ashes, are generally smashed and broken up and mixed with the soil, having barely one or two pots of bones and aslies entire, just as though the pick axe of the destroying explorer had been ziready there. Some ingenious writers have endeavoured to build up upon the evidence of these cairns a theory to the effect that their constructors must have been a tribe of the ancient Scythians, who, having wandered into this remote part of Asia, preferred a settlement on the hills they had discovered, to the hopeless undertaking of a return; and pursuing their hypothesis, and discovering instances in the customs and habits of the present Todars which assimilate them to the race which history describes under the name of Scythian s, they pass on to the conclusion that their ancestors were the founders of these tombs, and the descendents of the ancient Scythians. But this westimption is, in my opinion, erroneous. So prejudiced and bigoted a race as the Todars would naturally cherish, with the atmost veneration and solicitude, any vestiges of mortality which their most vague tradition should point to as monuments of their ancestors; and therefore, when we find them offering not the slightest objection to the cairns being broken open, and their contents rifled, and even voluntarily guiding strangers to unexplored ones, aiding them in the work of destruction, it is reasonable to conclude that they form no link of cummunication between the present race of Todars and any tribe of people by whom these singular monuments may have been raised.

"All clue being thus lost, it would beidle to follow out further any speculation as to the history of the Neilgherries prior to the first coming to them of the Todars for as no coins or inscriptions, or even hieroglyphics, have been found in any of the cairns, or their contents, there exists no evidence whatever by which inquiry could be guided into the right course.

" With the Todars, then, commences the only (partially) known history of the Neilgherries.

"At the time of their immigrating they probably found no aboriginal inhabitants settled on them, and seeing in the solitary and inaccessible character of the mountain region which they had discovered a fitting spot for the undisturbed exercise of their singular religion, and peculiar pastoral habits,—for the former of which they had possibly endured persecution amongst the tribes of the plains-they determined on permanently occupying it. Ages, according to their belief, must have passed while they remained in undisturbed possession of the hills, extending over such a space of time, that they express their belief that the founders of their tribe were created on them, until at length a small band of Kothers found their way up from the plains, and besought permission to till certain tracts of land which they indicated. From this era may be said to have commenced the self-arrogated sovereignty of the Todars over the land forming the plateau of the Neigherries, as, conceding the privilege sought for by the new comers, they stipulated that a certain proportion of all the grains which they might produce from the soil should be annually presented to them as "goodoo," or tribute, in acknowledgment of their feudal right over the territory. Not long after this, and according to their traditions, three or four centuries ago, a party of "Burghers," or "Buddughurs," emigrated from the " north country," (probably the northern part of Mysore and Canara), and came to the Nielgherries, and being good cultivators, at once perceived the advantages offered to them in the virgin and rich soil which they saw on all sides. They accordingly appear to have obtained permission to settle and cultivate land, upon the same terms of those granted to the Kothers, and inviting more of their brethren to join them, they soon swelled into a numerous tribe and spread over the hills, constructing their villages, and inclosing their fields (and doubtless clearing away much forest) in all directions. I can find no evidence of any sovereign ruler having been acknowledged amongst the Hill people, until about a century before the reign of Hyder Ally in Mysore, when, according to the tales of the Kothers and Burghers, there were three princes or chiefs who had sway over them; one in Todansad, who resided in a fortress called Mullaycotta, the walls and ditch of which still exist on a hill to the eastward of the village of " Shoolooroo," and westward of Mootmad and the Sugoo Pass; one in Meykenaad, in the fortress, the ruins of which are now called " Hoolicul Droog," situated on a lofty ridge overlooking the Coonoor Pass; and a third in Parumgenaad, in a fort, the site of which is still pointed out near Kotugherry, and called "Konagerry," though no vestige of a fort remains now recognizable. Their traditions state, that at this time, in consequence of disputes between the Burghers and Kothers regarding their respective boundaries, a general settlement of their lands took place under the auspices of three chiefs, when the lines of demarcation were definitively fixed; and though only by oral indication, in consequence of the ignorance of reading and writing which then, as now, prevailed, the limits of the territory of each tribe were so distinctly identified, that ever since, up to this time, no disputes about them have ever been known to occur."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

FRIDAY, June 29, 1849.

NOTWITHSTANDING some words of faint encouragement, which fell from the President of the Board of Control last night, in the House of Commons, implying that "the difficulties were likely to be removed," the period when railroads shall speed and facilitate the intercommunication of India appears remote. Meanwhile, a suggestion, of a very practical kind, has been offered for improving the means already at command, which is highly deserving of attention.—which will not interfere with the construction of railroads,-which will be no inconvenient adjunct to them when made, and a convenient substitute for them until they are completed. This suggestion is contained in a pamphlet published by Mr. Bourne,* in the shape of a Report to a Committee of Gentlemen formed for the establishment of improved steam navigation upon the rivers of India; and it contemplates the employment of a new kind of steam-vessel, adapted to the navigation of shallow and shifting rivers.

Mr. Bourne, who has recently returned from India, which he visited professionally, in connection with the operations of one of the Indian railways, brings to the discussion of this subject local as well as scientific knowledge. In one of his journeys he says, "I had to descend the Ganges from Mirzapore to Calcutta, and I was struck with the imperfect adaptation of the steamers on the river to meet the difficulties peculiar to their vocation. It was obvious to my mind, that a great river like the Ganges, full of shoals and quicksands, and perpetually shifting its channel, was practically unimprovable; the inference, therefore, was unavoidable, that the steamers must be adapted to the river, since the river could not be adapted to the steamers."

The simplicity and self-evidence of this proposition are admirable, and the only question which arises is, whether the adaptation is practicable, and at a moderate expense—a question, in our opinion, most satisfactorily answered.

Mr. Bourne observes that the rivers of India are uniformly shallow, and much obstructed by banks and shoals, whilst their beds are, in many cases, liable to change during every inundation.

"The Ganges is the only river upon which it has hitherto been found practicable to establish steam-vessels for commercial purposes; and even upon the Ganges the steamers cannot ascend higher than Allahabad, situated about midway between Calcutta and Delhi, at the confluence of the Jumna and Ganges. The steamers are unable to run during the night, lest they might get upon shoals, from which their subsequent removal would be difficult, and the progress made in ascending the stream is consequently not more than 50 or 60 miles a-day. Notwithstanding every precaution, however, the vessels are perpetually getting aground, and frequently stick in the river for days or weeks together, so that the voyage is necessarily very tedious, and consequently expensive.

Since his return to England, he says he has matured a scheme which suggested itself to him upon the spot, and he finds that, whereas the most suitable of the present Ganges boats carry only a cargo of about 60 tons upon a draught of about 3 feet water, and realize a speed of only 6 or 7 miles an hour, it is practicable to construct a vessel which shall carry 250 tons of cargo, upon 12 inches draught of water, with a speed of 15 miles an hour, and which shall at the same time be capable of running over the shoals on appropriate wheels provided for that purpose.

The drawings and specifications of this new kind of steamboat Mr. Bourne submitted to Messrs. Boulton and Watt, the eminent engineers, requesting them to furnish an estimate of the cost of such a vessel, complete in all her appointments; and those gentlemen distinctly state their opinion, "that the two principal difficulties arising from the strength of the current and the shallowness of the water, may be effectually surmounted by the species of vessel you have proposed for that purpose;" and, after going through the details, -- observing that "it is very difficult to form a correct estimate of the cost of vessels and machinery in which there is so much variation from ordinary practice," -they undertake to construct such a vessel, with its engines, for 35,000l. This amount, they state, may be reduced by certain modifications of the plan, and Mr. Bourne believes "it may be safely reckoned that five steamers, each capable of carrying 250 tons of cargo, on one foot of water, at a speed of fifteen miles an hour, could be set upon the Ganges, in complete working order, for 200,000l.

The effect of introducing these steamers upon the rivers of India, Mr. Bourne says,—

"Must be to open up the whole interior of the country to commerce, by establishing a cheap and expeditious mode of conveyance between the interior and the coast. Not only may the Ganges and Jumna be navigated from Calcutta to Delhi uninterruptedly throughout the year, but many of their larger tributaries, such as the Soane, Gogra, Gunduck, Goomty, and Chumbul, may also be navigated with great benefit to commerce. Such rivers as the Godavery, Nerbudda, and Tapty, which communicate with the cotton districts in the heart of the Deccan, may also be thus turned into great steam highways for bringing cotton and other products of the interior to the coast, and for transmitting English manufactures in return. The Indus, also, and its five tributary rivers flowing through the Punjab, will be all made accessible by means of steamers of the kind proposed, whereby a navigation of some thousands of miles will be opened; and the effect of which will be to enable the manufactures of England to supplant those of Russia in the markets of Central Asia."

The alternative modes of introducing this improved system of river navigation into India, are, that the experiment should be tried by the Government, or that a private company should be formed for the purpose, under the auspices of the Government. Mr. Bourne thinks that, where the benefits consequent upon success are so great, and the prospects are so promising, the Government should undertake the experiment; but, in order to assist the views of parties desirous of forming a private Company, he has prepared an estimate of the annual receipts and expenses of five steamers on the Ganges, between Calcutta and Delhi, which shows a balance of 25 per cent. upon a capital of 250,0001.

The conclusions of Mr. Bourne are based upon a considerable body of evidence, and, although we are aware that such conclusions are often unintentionally delusive, so few elements liable to error are involved in the calculations—river steam-navigation not being new in India—that we do not distrust his estimate.

In the execution of this scheme, it is not necessary to construct roads, or keep them in repair; nature has provided highways indestructible by the elements, and the mode of conveyance, moreover, is one to which the natives are habituated. This mode of navigation seems to be peculiarly well adapted to the rivers of our new territory, the Indus being in many parts shallow, its shoals frequently shifting; and the Indus is the great channel of communication between the Punjab and the sea.

"These volumes should be in the library of every one who feels an interest in the recent military exploits of our Army of the Sutlej, or in our future political relations of the Punjab. The work has, indeed, this double value;—it is valuable for present sidd permanent reference.... Independently, however, from any temporary interest which these volumes may derive from the recent events in the Punjab, they present much curious matter to the historical student, as well with regard to the religious character of the sect from which has sprung the warlike race of modern Sikhs, as with respect to the character and policy of Runject Singh."—John Bull.

"18-The work gives all the information on the history and topography of the Purjab that could be desired; and in the fulness and completeness of its details, and the diligence with which information has been collected, from every available source, constitutes this the best and most authentic work extant on the important country of which it treats."—Britannia.

"It is an authentic work, and its statements are perfectly trustworthy. In-deed, it will be necessary for every one having a library to aid this to the his-torical department, while the miscellaneous reader will find a powerful claim in its novel and stirring information."—Cheltenham Journal.

LANGUAGES. ORIENTAL

HINDUSTANI, PERSIAN, ARABIC, SANSKRIT, &c.,

TAUGHT, ON MODERATE TERMS.

AT No. 58, BURTON CRESCENT, FROM 10 A.M. TO 1 P.M.,

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.,

HINDUSTANI & PERSIAN LANGUAGES.

DICTIONARY

HINDUSTANI-ENGLISH & ENGLISH-HINDUSTANI.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.

In One Volume, royal 8vo, price £2. 12s. 6d.

By This work was undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—vis. a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgament of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one weltume royal octavo, of about 1,000 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The First Part—Hindustani and English—contains store words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The Second Part—English and Hindustani—is also by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every undvantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be themsel unworthy of extensive patronage.

(5) Dr. Forbes, by his Grammars and other works on the Hindustani and Persian Languages, has heretofore conferred an invaluable boon on all the students of Uriental literature; but this Dictionary crow.s the series as his magnum epus, for a great work we have no hesitation in pronouncing it, whether we regard its vast utility to the learner, or consider the immense amount of labour and gractical skill brought to bear upon it by the author."—Calcutta Raview, No. 18.

HINDUSTANI GRAMMAR, in the Oriental and Roman HINDUSTANT CHANDLAR, In the Oriental and Ivoluan Characters, with numerous copper-plate Illustrations of the Persian and Devanagari Systems of Alphabetic Writing. To which is added, a copious Selection of the Service of Persiance of Devanagari Characters, forming a complete introduction to the Bagh-o-Bahar, together with a Nogalusiary, and explanatory Notes. By Duncan Formes, LL.D. 8vo. dots. 103. cloth, 12s.

HINDUSTANI MANUAL: a Pocket Companion for These who visit India in my capacity; intended to facilitate the essential sentences of conversing with disease, and composing with accuracy, in the most useful of all the languages spoken in our Eastern Empire.—In Two Parts.

Part I.—A compendious Grammar of the Language, with Exercises on its more prominent peculiarities; together with a Selection of useful Phrases, Dialogues, and Subjects for translation into English.

PART II.—A Vocabulary of useful Words, English and Hindustani; shewing at the same time the difference of idlom between the two Languages. By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.

Second Edition, considerably improved. 18mo. bound, 5s. Gd. .

Second Edition, considerably improved. 18mo. bound, 5a, 6d.

"This work can be honestly recommended to all who are desirous of acquiring the elements of the Hindustani language, or of making themselves understood among the people of this country. We have seedom, if ever, seen such a small pocket-companion with such a variety of useful instruction. The language of the Vocabulary and of the Dialogues appears quite unexceptionable. Any one acquainted with Hindustani will at once recognize its idiomatic accusates, and cheerfully recommend it to the notice of all those who desire to come east to lodis not altogether unprepared to convey their own wishes to those who surround them."—Friend of India, published at Serampore.

The BAGH-O-BAHAR; consisting of entertaining Tales in the Hindustam Language. A new edition, carefully collated with original MSS., having the essential wowel points and punctuation marked throughout. To which is added, a Woodbulary of the Words occurring in the work. By Duncan Forders, Ll. O. Boyal are, cloth, 15s.

•e• The Bagh o-Bahar is the test-book in which cadets and assistant-surgeons have to pass an examination in India. This edition was prepared under the authority of the Hon. the East-India Company.

GRAMMAR of the PERSIAN LANGUAGE. To which is added, a Selection of Easy Extracts for reading, together with a copious Vocabulary. By Duncan Fornes, LL.D. Second edition, greatly improved and considerably enlarged. Royal 8vo. cloth . . . . 12s. 6a.

<sup>3</sup>6. A knowledge of Persian is absolutely necessary for reading the best compositions in Hindustani. The preceding Grammar, with its Selections, will amply suffice for this purpose: when the student has finished the Hindustani Grammar, with its Selections (in the Persian character), he will find it greatly to his advantage to devote a month to the Persian before he commences the Bagh-o-Bahar.

JUST PUBLISHED,

A NEW MAP OF THE PUNJAB

AND SIKH TERRITORIES.

Drawn by JOHN WALKER. On One Sheet, price 5s., or in a Case, 6s.

"A new Map of these districts has just been published by Messrs. ALLEN and Co., of Leadenhall Street, upon which apparently great care has been bestowed. The Map is very clearly printed, and the scenes of the military operations, to which so much interest is at present attached, are laid down with such perspicuity, that it would be easy to follow almost every march of the army. The Map is said to have been compiled from the most authentic sources of information."—Times, March 1, 1849.

"A new Map of the Punjab and Sikh Territory, just completed by Messrs. ALLEN, and compiled from the most authentic sources of information, with great care, contains all the places mentioned in the accounts of the military operations. At the present moment, it is a most valuable publication, and we heartily recommend it."—Naval and Military Gazette, March 3, 1849.

"Messrs Allen have just issued a finely-engraved Map of the Punjab and Sikh Territory, with due attention to the spots where our gallant troops have so valiantly fought. Who, at the present moment, would not pore over such a Map,—with interest point out where the brave Cureton fell, or where Edwardes earned the wreath that now adorns his youthful brow? Or, if we take a more painful glance, how many mothers, sisters, friends, will not, with mourned eyes, wander in their imagination along the banks of the Chenab, and mark the spot upon the Map where a son, a brother, or a friend lies buried in an honourable grave on the bloody field of Chillianwallah? And such a Map was wanting, and Messrs. Allens have at once provided one with great care and skill. This Map folds up in a neat cover, and can be carried in the pocket."—Mining Chronice, March 6, 1849.

"Messrs. Allens's March 6, 1849.

"Mesers, Allen's Map is mounted on cloth, and compactly folded in a book-cover. The whole of the places on the banks of the five Rivers are carefully and accurately indicated. The progress of the campaigns can be traced without the slightest difficulty."—United Service Gazette, March 10, 1849.

"This new Map of the Punjab, which has just been completed, is compiled from the latest and most authentic sources of information, and is unquestionably the fullest and most perfect Map of that, at the present period, most interesting district of findia hitherto published. It has evidently been executed, with great care, and contains all the places named in the accounts of the recent military operations clearly laid down."—Heraid, March 14, 1849.

1. Their policies cover the risk of living and voyaging over a far larger portion of the globe than do those issued by any other Company in existence. They allow the assured to reside in the Australasian and North American colonies, and at the Cape of Good Hope. They also allow to the assured for the whole of life one passage out and home to any of those colonies. For British India a very moderate extra premium is charged, and the premium is reduced to the English scale on the return of the assured life to England for permanent residence.

2. Premiums may be paid, and claims settled at Sydney, where there is a Board of Directors and Trustees; and at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, where there are Agents.

3. A third of the premiums may remain unpaid for five years; nor is it necessary for the maintenance of the Assurance to pay up the premium at the end of that time, but the unpaid thirds may remain as a debt against the policy, if the interest be regularly paid upon them as the renewal premiums fall due.

ANNUITIES.

The Annuities offered by the Company are on a more favourable scale than those offered by any other Companies, having been calculated with reference to the rates of Interest obtainable on Colonial Investments. Annuitants also participate in the profits.

HALL PLACE SCHOOL, BEXLEY, KENT.

HALL PLACE SCHOOL, BEXLEY, KENT.

HE Official Memorandum lately issued by the Commander-in-Chief with regard to the examination of candidates for commissions in the Line, and the reported intention of the Directors of the East-India Company to adopt a similar form of examination for candidates for direct appointments in the Indian Army, have induced the Proprietors of Hall Place School so modify their system as to adapt it in all respects to the new order of things. In this School, the Mathematics will, as herecofore, hold the first place in the order of importance. The Latin and French Languages, together with German for the Queen's service and Hindostance for that of the East-India Company, will be taught by masters of seprience and ability. Modern History, the History of England and of British India, Ancient and Modern Geography, and the structure and composition of the English Language, will be regularly and systematically studied. Practical instructions in Military Surveying and Plan Drawing, Field Fortification, the use of the Theodokite, Box Sextant, and Prismatic Compass, will continue to be given by a Woolwich Professor.

The Musket and Bayonet Drill, together with the Sword Exercise, are taught by a Serjeant of the Artillery.—References to many Officers both in the Queen's and the Company's service are permitted.

For Prospectuses, address Messrs. ROLPE and FLETCHER, 150, Aldersgate Street; or Messrs. JOHN WOOLER and Co., Bombay.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC TEA AND FOREIGN ESTABLISHMENT, 324, 326, and 328, REGENT STREET.

PEARLY SET of TEETH.—ROWLANDS' ODONTO. DEARLY SET of TEETH.—ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or PRABL DENTIFRICE,—a white powder, compounded of the choicest and most rechercheing red either of the Oriental herbal, of inestimable value in preserving and beautifying the teeth, strengthening the gums, and in giving sweetness and perfume to the breath. It extirpates all tartarous adhesions to the teeth, and insures a pearl-like whiteness to the enamelled surface. Its anti-septic and anti-scrobutic properties exercise a highly beneficial and salutary influence; they arrest the further progress of decay of the teeth, induce a healthy action of the gums, and cause them to assume the brightness and colour indicative of perfect soundness. The Proprietors of this Dentifrice piedge themselves that its efficacy in preserving and embellishing the teeth far surpasses anything of the kind ever yet offered to the public, and has, in consequence, obtained its selection by her Majesty the Queen, the Court and Royal Family of Great Britain, and the sovereigns and Nobility throughout Europe.—Price 2s. 9d, perbox. Caution.—To protect the public from fraud, the Proprietors' name and address, thus,—"A. Rowland and Son, 90, Hatton Garden," are engraved on the Government stamp, which is affixed on each box. Sold by them, and by all Chemists and Perfumers.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE world of politics has often been compared, in its operations, to the world of nature; great excitement is followed by exhaustion; after the hurricane comes the calm. The storm of war and agitation in the Punjab has been succeeded by a "profound tranquillity," and "barrenness of events," a chronicle of "news of little importance," are the preliminary announcements of the various journals, which must grievously distress those who, like the Athenians of old, are incessantly craving for "something new."

To those, however, who take a real interest in the welfare of India, and who seek it not in the glare of military renown and the aggrandizement of her territory, but in the amelioration of her masses, the suspension of these eruptions of excitement, which engross the attention of superficial politicians, is grateful; it affords a breathing-time,-a pause,-an interval, which the wise and virtuous statesman will improve. Like the husbandman, when the tempest which has purified the atmosphere has subsided, having corrected the vices of the soil, he will return to his labours, in a more genial temperature, and with happier auspices,his energies inspired and stimulated by hope.

All the accounts by this mail assure us that matters are settling down gradually, quietly, and orderly; "the officers intrusted with the task of working the new political engine are at their posts, or on the way to them; lines are being marked out, barracks in course of erection, and the various arrangements requisite for holding and governing the newlyacquired province are all progressing towards completion." The revenues of the Punjab, it is said, are likely to be more productive and far more easily collected than was anticipated. "Instead of being a source of increased expense, that province is expected to furnish a considerable sum to the general revenue of India, after defraying its own charges, and that without oppressing the people." The Delhi Gazette, indeed, regrets to learn that the enlistment of Sikhs into the new corps, which are to form the proposed contingent, is not going on well. "The Sikhs refuse to take service, and the general opinion is against the formation of this contingent, and for an augmentation of the regular army." This may be so much the better. Some official documents are published in the papers, consisting of reports and instructions from the new British authorities, whence it appears that the "Board of Administration for the affairs of the Punjab" had placed the Barah doab in the charge of Mr. R. Montgomery, as Commissioner; that the tract had been divided into four districts, the officers in charge of which would exercise the powers of judge, magistrate, and collector; that the Chuch and Rechna doabs had been placed under Mr. E. Thornton, as Commissioner, each being divided into districts, the officers in charge having the same powers as those in the Barah doab. The Commissioners of Mooltan and of the Sind-Sagur doab had not yet joined. The province of Peshawur had been placed under Major G. Lawrence, who would exercise therein the powers of judge, magistrate, and collector; and the district of Hazara is held in charge by Captain Abbott, who, as well as Major Lawrence, is under the immediate superintendence of the Board: Mr. Edgworth is reported to be appointed to Mooltan, Mr. D. Macleod at Julundhur, and Captain Ross at Leiah.

In their instructions to the Commissioners, the Board of Administration strongly recommend cordial and zealous co-operation with the military authorities; caution in the issue of purwanahs to the native officials; stringent measures against trespasses on property, and against any attempt at forced labour. The necessity and policy of being as accessible as possible to all ranks, is urged upon the various functionaries, who are recommended to mix with the people, and ascertain their wants and wishes; to study their characters and master their dialects. "It is incumbent on all those placed in authority," observes the officiating Secretary to the Board, Major Edwardes, "while steadily repressing attempts at violence and breach of the laws, to treat kindly and considerately all classes, and especially those who have lost so much by the change of rule." For this reason, and for their local knowledge, the employment of natives, where practicable, is recommended.

These instructions are based upon sound principles, and breathe a spirit which, if it informs and influences the new officials, will exert a potent power over men hitherto taught to believe that Europeane are tyrants by those who oppressed and tred them down.

It does not seem to be the intention of the authorities at present to remove the late Maharajah, Dhulcep Singh, to the British provinces in India. Whether this change of intention has been dictated by a belief that he would be less dangerous at Lahore than at Allahabad, or produced by the escape of the Maharanee from Benares, can only be conjectured. It now appears that the fugitive Ranee, who reached Katmandoo, in Nepal, in the disguise of a female devotee, is to be allowed to reside there, the British Government making her an allowance of Rs. 1,000 per month, or 1,2001. a year. The whole of her property at Benares has, it is said, been confiscated.

The troops at the new stations are housing themselves, especially at Peshawur, where the large native houses of the expelled Barukhzaie chiefs have afforded much accommodation. The accounts from Peshawur, which are to the 12th of May, state that Brigadier Dundas has caused great dissatisfaction by his obvious leaning towards the Bombay troops, between whom and the Bengal troops unpleasant jealousies are said to exist. The lines at Rawul Pindee have been finished, and by the latest accounts the troops were at once to move into them. The military occupation of the country will, therefore, soon be complete.

The trial of Moelraj had not yet commenced, owing to the indisposition of Brigadier Godby, one of the Commissioners. It was expected to commence shortly; Mr. Boweing, of the civil service, was to conduct the prosecution.

At Lahore all was life and festivity. Since General Gilbert's arrival, that city had become the scene of social amusement, while the interchange of hospitalities between the regiments of her Majesty and the Hon. Company showed that there the spirit of absurd jealousy, which formerly existed between the members of the two services, is fast giving way to one of a more generous rivalry. Nominal rolls of claimants for the Punjab medal have been called for by Lord Gough; and it is asserted by a north-west journal, likely to be well informed, that the medal itself is to be distributed to all who have served in a military capacity at any time during the late war within the territories under the government of Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, but that a clasp is to be added for each battle to such as served in it.

"This arrangement," says the Madras Athenaum, "will, we fear, not satisfy the captors of Mooltan, who are clamorous for a distinct medal for their successful siege, and in the assertion of their claims—we now form our judgment from the letters which have found their way into the public papers—have indulged in a large amount of self-glorification and unnecessary depreciation of the services of their brother soldiers. All have nobly done their duty in the sphere in which fortune placed them; but the consciousness of this, and the knowledge that their country approves their valour, suffice not to satisfy the soldiers of the Indian army now-a-days, and accordingly, after every battle we have a loud ontery for extra 'batta' and honorary decorations. We have nowish to depreciate the services of the army of the Punjaub or that of Mooltan, but we condemn the principle of indiscriminate eulogy and reward which has found its way into the practice both of the authorities and the troops, and deprecate the undervaluation of these distinctions which must ensue from their too general bestowment."

The order referred to in our last Summary, probibiting the wives and families of officers and soldiers from proceeding to any station beyond the Ravee, appears in this Mail. The order was issued so late that many ladies, who had already gone to join their husbands, had to retrace their steps, to their very great inconvenience and discomfort.

Maharajah Goolab Single has sent a deputation to congratulate the British Government on their success.

Sir Henry Lawrence has found it necessary to leave Lahore for the hills, to recover his health, which has been impaired by his incessant attention to his arduous duties.

The great diamond, Koh-i-noor (of which a description will be found in our columns), is to be sent home to her Majesty, some say by the hands of Major Edwardes, others by those of Lord Gough,

The order is out for the formation of five regiments of irregular cavalry and as many of irregular infantry in the Punjab. It has also been publicly notified that a sixth captain is to be added to each regiment of light cavalry in the three Presidencies. A letter from Lahore states that there is some difficulty in getting commanding officers for the new regiments of irregular cavalry; "exceptions have been taken to the small rate of pay for the men, the difficulty of getting efficient men and horses from those recommended for employment by the Board, who are anxious to get as many men from those irregular troops who assisted us during the war as possible employed."

Lord Gough has put forth his farewell address to the army, a copy of which will be found elsewhere. He is said to be much grieved at the manner in which he has been treated by his Horse Guards friends, and has retired into private life, taking a house at some distance from Simla. A correspondent of the Englishman, speaking of Lord Gough's supersession, says—

"I am sorry that this misfortune has fallen upon him in his old age, and especially after the admirable wind-up that he has made of the campaign. He resigned the day after the battle of Guzerat, but the appointment of Sir Charlea Napier will have been made irrespective of that resignation. Whatever may have been Lord Gough's rashness, he certainly was personally liked by the whole army, as far as I can judge. I do not assert that it was necessary that the battle of Chillianwalla should have been fought, but there are many people who think otherwise, and the whole result of that day must not be set down to the Commander-in-Chief. He could not expect that his cavalry brigade would run away when most wanted, and cripple his own artillery. Neither I believe should he be held responsible for not using artillery upon the masses of infantry which supported the guns by which the 24th was cut to pieces. However, whether necessary or etherwise to supercede Lord Gough, I think that most people are sorry for him, and I hope Sir Charles Napier will be as popular."

The arrival of Sir William Gomm at Calcutta was expected. It appears that Sir William, having received a hint, by the February mail, of his appointment to the command-in-chief in India, in the joy of his heart, and no doubt fully believing that it was his duty, took his passage from the Mauritius forthwith, and would reach Calcutta just after Sir Charles Napier, the real Commander-in-Chief, had superseded Lord Gough. This play of commanders is a whimsical affair, and affords room for some severe jokes at the expense of those who have indulged in it.

The presidential intelligence is barren. At Calcutta, the draft of a legislative act for establishing a new court for the recovery of debts to the amount of Rs. 500 at the three presidency cities has appeared in the Gazette. The new tribunals are to be formed on the model of the county courts of England.

At the expense of some space, we have given official lists of Union Bank shareholders—those who, by payment of their assessment, or giving security for it, are protected against the creditors of the concern, and those who are yet fair game for all who think them worth the pursuit.

The Bengal Hurkaru states that two or three cases, in which parties connected with the management of Mofussil banks are charged with conduct of a questionable character, are finding their way before the public. "Should they prove to be as described by rumour, it will not be wonderful if the Government interferes to prohibit its servants from being in any way connected with trading associations of any kind."

In our last Summary we noticed the establishment of an experimental school for Hindoo girls of the middle and higher classes of the community. The institution had continued to be a prominent subject of discussion. A violent agitation against it has been got up by some of the orthodox Hindoos; but, though suffering some damage, the school is likely to weather the storm. Already, it is reported, some of the leading natives have withdrawn their opposition, if they have not yet openly allied themselves with the bold little band of reformers.

At Madras, the great event during the month is a railway meeting, held at the Banqueting-hall on the 29th of May, Sir H. Pottinger in the chair, the assembly comprising all the notables of Madras. A committee was appointed to prepare a scheme, which met on the 2nd of June, and came to resolutions, which are given in another column.

The Madras Athenæum states, that a vacancy in the Chief Justiceship of Madras will take place next year by the retirement of Sir Edward Gambier from the post he has so long filled.

From Bombay we have no local news of any interest.

The intelligence from China, which is to the 25th of May, is unimportant. The excitement at Canton had subsided. The Chinese brokers have consented to pay a certain small sum upon all goods bought from foreigners towards a "Consoo Fund," for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the Garde Mobile, and to meet similar outlays on future occasions. The establishment of this fund is considered directly opposed to the spirit and letter of the existing treaties, and indicates a return on the part of the Chinese to the old system. Pirates still abounded. The Inflexible steamer had brought in three large well-armed piratical boats, which they secured after a desperate resistance. Several European portmanteaus were found on board of the boats, among them one belonging to the Spanish mail agent who was attacked a short time ago and lost his life. A large piratical boat had been brought to Ningpo by H. M.'s brig Pilot, and handed over to the Chinese authorities there. The governor of Macao was at serious issue with the Chinese authorities. The U. S. ship Preble had returned from Japan with some shipwrecked sailors.

Adelaide papers state that the gold in the mines of Melbourne turns out to be only iron pyrites. A vein of silver ore had been discovered in Van Diemen's Land, not far from Hobart Town. A number of German emigrants had arrived in that colony, and the settlers are as eager to engage their services as they are unwilling to accept those of the Irich. A Launceaton paper mentions that a large quantity of wheat was being cut for hay!

An official report from New Zealand declares that the earthquakes which excited so much alarm have done but little mischief. The smelting experiment which was announced some time ago has completely succeeded, and it is expected that a portion of the ores produced will be shipped as metal.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE PUNJAB.

From Major H. B. Edwardes, C.B., Officiating Secretary to the Board of Administration, to Captain Burroughes, Assistant Adjutant-General, Punjab Division.

Sir,—I have the honour, by direction of the Board of Administration for the affairs of the Punjab, to state, for the information of Major-Gen. Sir W. R. Gilbert, K.C.B., commanding in the Punjab, that the following civil arrangements have been made for the management of the country:—

2nd. Mr. R. Montgomery has assumed charge of the Barah Doab as commissioner. That tract has been divided into four districts, the officers in charge of which will exercise the power of judge, magistrate, and collector.

3rd. The Chuch and Rechna Doabs have been placed in charge of Mr. E. Thornton, as commissioner, being divided into four districts.* The officers in charge will exercise the same powers as those in the Barcea Doab.

4th. The officers selected as commissioners of Mooltan, and the Sindh Saugor Doab, have not yet joined; for the present, Lieut. James and Gen. Cortlandt have charge of the first-named province, and Captain Nicholson and Lieut. Coxe as district officers.

5th. Major G. Lawrence has been placed in charge of the province of Peshawar, and will exercise control in it, as judge, magistrate, and collector, under the immediate orders of the Board; the district of Huzara is held in charge by Captain Abbott, also under the immediate superintendence of the Board.

6th. The Board further direct me to annex extract of a letter which has been approved of by the Governor-General, who has since called its attention to the great importance of a good understanding existing between the military and civil authorities, and the Board feel confident that General Sir W. R. Gilbert, K.C.B., will impress the same sentiments on the officers commanding detached brigades.

H. B. EDWARDES, Officiating Secretary. (Signed) Lahore, 12th April, 1849.

Extract from a letter from the Officiating Secretary to the Board of Administration, to R. Montgomery, Eaq., Commissioner Baree Doab. No. 12, dated 7th April, 1849.

Para. No. 11. You are strongly recommeded to instil on your subordinates the importance of cordial and zealous co-operation with the military authorities, whereby not only their own labours will be lightened and the public interests furthered.

12. You should be most careful that no person issues any purwana to the native officials in the district but those who are in civil authority, and you should even caution your subordinates against giving any general purwana for any purpose, public or private. If aid is required, it must be specified, and the condition of payment noted in the purwana, and any infringement of this rule should be brought to the notice of the military authority, and the result, if unsatisfactory, reported to the Board.

13. Stringent measures should be taken against trespassing on field preserves, &c.; cattle can of course be sent out to the jungle to graze, but cutting down branches of trees in enclosures and sacred places, sites of villages, &c., should be punished, as trespass notice first being given in cantonments that it will be so.

14. You are reminded that offenders caught in the act or beyond the limits of military jurisdiction, can be punished without reference to their military superiors, notice being given if they are soldiers, and the punishment inflicted; but if the culprits escape into cantonment, they must be summoned through officers commanding.

15. You should also exert yourself to suppress any attempt at forced labour. Our troops are too apt to press the villagers on the road-side to carry baggage and guard property. It is not sufficient simply to take up such cases as are brought to notice; proclamations should be issued, explaining that all such acts are illegal, and punishable by the British authorities.

16. In the event of a disturbance which the district officers plainly see cannot be put down with the means at their disposal, they should at once apply to the military authorities for aid, furnishing any information which is possessed of the state of the country, the work to be done, and the like; the amount of force to be employed must rest with the military power. Copy of the requisition should invariably be forwarded to you direct, and if you are on the spot, or instant relief not essential, you should be consulted previous to making the requisition. If present, it should be made by you in preference to coming from the district officer.

17. I am also directed to request that you will urge on all your officers the necessity and policy of being as accessible as possible to all ranks, to mix with them and ascertain their wants and wishes, to study their characters and master their dialects. It is incumbent on all those placed in authority, while steadily repressing attempts at violence and breach of the laws, to treat kindly and considerately all classes, and especially those who have lost so much by the change of rule. For this reason, as well as for their local knowledge, you should require your assistants to employ the natives of the country whenever practicable.

H. B. EDWARDES, Officiating Secretary. (Signed) No. 139.—Division orders by Major-General Sir W. R. Gilbert, K.C.B., Commanding in the Punjaub.

Commanding officers will have those passages having reference to the conduct of their men in marching through the country, &c., and their liability to punishment for any misconduct, fully explained to them, and will impress on their minds the absolute necessity of their abstaining from seizing villagers and travellers to carry their baggage on the line of march, which they are particularly larly apt to do when marching in small detachments; and the Major-General would recommend commanding officers of corps to make arrangements to keep up a small establishment of camels or tattoos to carry the baggage of small guards proceeding on escort duty, for without such arrangement return guards will be embarrassed to carry their baggage, and no excuse will be received for seizing villagers.

Division Head Quarters, Lahore, 1st May, 1849. It is notified for general information, that the right hon. the Governor-General has strictly prohibited ladies or soldiers' wives proceeding beyond Labore.

Division Hd. Qr., 4th May, 1849.

No. 52. Under instructions from army head quarters, dated 30th ultimo, No. 557, and in accordance with the wishes of Government, the Major-General desires that no ladies or soldiers' wives be permitted on any account whatever to proceed beyond Lahore.

The presence of ladies and soldiers' wives in camps and stations in a newly-acquired and unsettled country being productive of extreme inconvenience and embarrassment to the State, all parties will see the propriety of strictly complying with this peremptory order. Should any ladies or soldiers' wives have proceeded to reside with their husbands, they are to be required immediately to return to Lahore, or within the provinces, under such instructions as will be conveyed to officers commanding districts and stations beyond the Ravee, who are hereby required to report to the deputy assistant adjutant-general of the division, what number of ladies and soldiers' wives have been ascertained to have proceeded beyond that river.

Lahore, 13th May, 1849. " Particular detailed instructions regarding the killing of kine in the city and Anarkullee are out, and a hutcher-serjeant appointed as superintendent of the slaughter-houses. Beef not to be carried about by butchers for ordinary sale, and all are strictly enjoined from ostentatiously displaying beef, to the horror and chagrin of the Sikhs so lately in the ascendant. The 'Aam Khas' is fitting up in the palace for the trial of Dewan Moolraj. The commission consists of C. G. Mansel, Ecq., R. Montgomery, Eq., Brigadier. Godby, C.B., and Mr. L. Bowring, C. S., as attorney-general and prosecutor. The Dewan has one Girdharee Lall as his counsel. The trial commences on Wednesday, or a day or two later, and it is to be an open court. A Court of Inquiry, special, is sitting at Anar-kullee, to inquire into the conduct of certain officers of the 2nd Europeans, said to have beaten Nubbee Bux, the shopkeeper, and sundry of his servants. The heat intense, and a good deal of sickness prevailing among the Europeans."

BENGAL.

THE NORTH-WESTERN BANK.

We observe that Col. Angelo, the secretary of the N.W. Bank, has come out in proprid persond in the Mofussilite, to meet the charge made against that bank in the columns of a contemporary, of having unauthorizedly invested the moneys of a constituent in the pur-chase of its own shares. This is so far right and proper; and if Captain Webster, the constituent in question, deliberately signed the document of which Colonel Angelo publishes a copy-and no one who reads the colonel's letter can doubt the fact—the charge of "want of authority" falls to the ground altogether. But the private letter which Colonel Angelo publishes, leaving the signature blank, is not so satisfactory, and gives some colour for the remainder of the charge, viz. that the bank sold to its constituent shares which the bank itself had on hand, and that the sale had small reference to the actual market-price of the day. The unnamed writer of the private letter, writing too from London, seems to have assumed that the rate would be par, for he actually specifies the number which the money is to realize (138 shares), evidently basing the calculation upon a par rate as a matter of course. This looks a little as if the fact were- and as if the writer of that letter knew it-that the bank always holds a number of shares of its own, which it sells at the market rate when that rate is a premium, but which it otherwise sells at par, whenever opportunity offers for selling, without reference to the market rate! Captain Webster certainly mentions a par rate himself; but it is obviously specified as the maximum limit, not as the price which under any circumstances was to be given. Now we have been positively and most credibly informed, and by two different parties, that at the end of last year and the beginning of the present, they endeavoured to sell a few North-Western Bank shares at a small discount, and could not!

We do not say this fact is conclusive, but it is significant. It is possible that the directors of the bank may have bond fide purchased these 138 shares at par in the open market, expressly for their constituent Captain Webster. If they did, and purchased at the current rate then prevailing at Meerut, their constituent cannot complain, because shares could have been got at a cheaper rate in Calcutta. But if they made over to Captain Webster shares previously held on behalf of the bank itself, and charged him the par value for no other reason than that the bank never sells below that rate, we say the transaction is utterly unjustifiable. It is a rule of law, we believe, certainly one founded on good sense, that an agent employed to purchase shall never be allowed to buy from himself. All transactions for an absent principal must not only be honest in fact, but altogether above suspicion of bias or interest.

We have one question, therefore to ask of Colonel Angelo. To whom did the 138 shares belong before they were transferred to Captain Webster?—Hurkaru, May 29.

THE KOH-EE-NOOR.

(Translated from the Simla Akhbar.)

"It is already known to the public that this large diamond, which was lately in the treasury of Maharajah Dulcep Singh, is about to be despatched to England as a present to her most gracious Majesty the Queen, therefore it will be most acceptable here to write a few words about its weight, price, and the mine from which it was dug out, which we have made out with the greatest care and correctness through the kindness of a gentleman. It was generally believed that this diamond belonged to the Pandus, but Tavernier says that it was dug out of the mine of Koloor, which is about four days' journey north-west from Masulipatam, in the Nizam's territories, on the banks of the Godavuree, and it was presented to Shahjehan by Meer Jumla, who was at first commander-in-chief of the king of Golkonda's army, and afterwards of that of Aurungzeb. The mine of Koloor was discovered not more than a hundred years before the time of Shahjehan. A zumeendar had found a diamond, when he was preparing ground for sowing melons, + and this led to the discovery of the mine. The Koh-ee-Noor is 319 ruttees in weight, and its value was estimated in the time of Shabjehan at Rs. 78,15,525. Shabjehan applied it to adorn the famous peacock throne, which was taken by Nadirshah to Persia, whence the diamond was brought back to Afghanistan by Amedshah, Doorrance; it remained in the possession of his successors until Maharajah Runjeet Singh obliged Shah Shoojah to deliver it to him. The Shah at the first demand had told him that the diamond was mortgaged to some banker in Kandahar, but the shrewdness of the Maharajah did not accept this excuse; he planted guards around the residence of the Shah, and ordered them to suffer no person to pass without a previous search, and Bhae Ram Singh was deputed to bring the diamond. The Shah protested in the strongest terms against this treatment, and called upon Runjeet to reflect on the discredit he was entailing upon himself in the estimation of neighbouring princes in ordering restraint upon the person and family of a royal stranger, who had cast themselves in distress on his protection and honour: the Bhae represented that his master had resolved to obtain the stone, alike careless of the means or the consequences, and he was now about to execute the least agreeable part of his instructions, and to prohibit the ingress of food to the Shah and his whole family. The fallen prince, his begums, and children fasted for two days, and being unable to shake their firmness, Runjeet contrived another machination; he intercepted some letters alleged to have been addressed by Shah Shoojah to the Vuzeer Futteh Khan, and another Dorranee noble, descriptive of his sufferings and seeking deliverance. It was at the time generally believed that the scraps were forged, but Runject directed immediately two companies of Sikhs to guard the Shah, and threats were now made of sending him to the fortress of Govindgurh. The unfortunate prince, wearied and harassed by confinement, and separated from his family, at length consented to relinquish the diamond. On the lat of June, Runjest, with a very few attendants, waited on the humbled monarch, but the dignity and self-possession which sat on the fine countenance of the Shah impressed them all with aws. For almost an hour a solemn silence was kept, when Runjeet getting impatient, directed one of his attendants in a low tone of voice to remind the Shah of the purport of his visit; no answer was returned. At last the fallen monarch spoke with his eyes to an attendant cunuch, who, making his obeisance, retired and soon after reappeared with a small roll which he softly put down equidistant between the king and Runjeet. A pause ensued. Bhuwaneedas at length, by order of Runjeet, lifted up and unfolded the packet. The diamond was exhibited, and Runjeet and his followers retired with it. Delhi says that this diamond was taken from India by Nadir the king of Persia on the same date (29th March) in which it was now retaken from the Sikhs by the rulers of India. The fact is that it belonged originally to the rulers of India, and now it has come back again after such a long time to the hands of its rightful There is not the least doubt, that now it will gain additional lustre by being attached to the crown of her most gracious Majesty the Queen Victoria. But if the Government order it to be exhibited and shown to the public at every large city in its way from Lahore to Calcutta, the unitosity of the natives will be fully natisfied, and then they will not have a single doubt about the annexation of the Punjaub."-Delhi Gazette, May 23.

BAGGAGE OF THE INDIAN ARMY.

The number of camp-followers generally in attendance upon Indian armies in the field is unquestionably very large, and far greater than has ever been tolerated in European warfare; still Sir Charles Napier overrated it when he stated it to be in the proportion of three camp-followers to every fighting man on the Bombay side, and five to one on the Bengal. Sir Charles, when he comes to reform the baggage department, will not find quite so much room for reformution as he anticipates. There is much unquestionably to be done, but nothing like what he supposes. The documents in the Affghanistan Blue-book are very much to the purpose; and, examined in detail, exhibit the proportion of camp-fol-lowers to fighting men in almost every branch of the army. It would appear that the followers of an European regiment of infantry in the field are to the officers and soldiers in the proportion of five to eight; that the followers of a native infantry regiment are to the officers and soldiers as forty-seven to one hundred and three, or about one to every two; whilst the followers of a native cavalry regiment are to the fighting men nearly in the proportion of three to one.

Therefore, it is only in the case of cavalry, where the followers are swelled by a host of syces and grass-cutters, that Sir Charles Napier's estimate for the Bengal army approaches to any thing like the fact; and even here, so far from the campfollowers being in the proportion of five to every soldier, they do not quite come up to three. We conceive that we are justified in asserting that, so far from the followers of a Bengal force being to the soldiers as five, or even three to one, they are not, in most instances, even equal, and under no circumstances rise to an average of above one-and-a-half to each fighting man. If the average is ever as high as Sir Charles Napier states, it must be in the case of Madras troops, marching with all their families, in the course of an ordinary relief. A great deal may, nevertheless, doubtless be effected in the way of reducing the baggage of the army, and with it of course the followers. Very few of their own necessaries are borne by our Bengal sepoys, and exorbitant are their demands for carriage, whenever there is a chance of their being attended to. We do not however think that the officers, that is the regimental officers, of the Bengal army, are chargeable generally with encumbering themselves with many luxuries on the line of march, although encouraged to do so by the antiquated regulations of the service, which prescribe a double-poled tent, twenty-three feet long, by fifteen broad, and twelve high, as the equipment of a captain in the field; and a single-poled tent, fourteen feet square, of subal-True comfort, no less than economy, points out the lightest possible equipment as the best on service, and our officers rarely, we believe, depart from this principle. The quarter in which reform is, however, required, is amongst the grandees and staff of the army. This is of course the secret of the enormous trains of baggage which "hamper the movements" of every army commanded by the Chief in person. Every officer will march luxuriously as long as the expense does not fall on camp equipage, and economizes both accordingly. The public pays for the chief and his train, and the result is exactly what might be expected.—Englishman, May 11.

* It is due to Dr. Stewart to say, that he is at present a shareholder only as trustee, and that the trust with which he is connected has paid up its assessment: Dr. Stewart, however, is esparately assessed in his individual character; but as he has held no shares in his individual right since the 28th of September, 1841 (at which date he sold all his shares and the purchaser has been assessed for them), and as his name only appears in the memorials as trustee, and not as holding any shares on his own account, he has declined to pay this assessment and disputes his liability.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAIL (express from Bambay), with letters from London to April 25, reached Calcutta on the 31st of May. The Haddington was daily expected.

AN ADDITIONAL CAPTAIN was appointed to each regiment of cavalry of the three presidencies on the 8th of May:

THE WEATHER AT CALGUTTA has been somewhat variable of late, its general sultriness being tempered at intervals by strong nor-westers. The health of the town is at least up to the average for this season of the year.

THERE DARING DACOLUTES have been perpetrated in Purneally in the course of a month, and property to the value of 50,000 rupees (so say the natives) carried off, without the seizure of a single guilty man.

A VERDICT OF MANSLAUGHTER has been returned by the ceroner's jury against Pennington, the pilot who beat Jones to death.

A CORONER'S INQUEST was held on the 18th of May on the body of Mr. Edward Templar, who committed suicide by taking laudanum. There was no evidence that the patient was of unsound mind, and the jury returned a verdict of felo de se.

THE WHEEL TAX.—The Indian Times hears that the Deputy-Governor has requested six Europeans and as many natives of experience, to give their opinion as to the propriety of enforcing the wheel-tax, which, whatever may be the benefits to result from it, is certainly very unpopular.

OVERLAND MAIL.—The Hurkaru hears that the charge of the steam route between Aden, Suez, and Bombay will shortly be handed over to the Peninsular and Oriental Company, who will be able to manage the line better and more cheaply.

SIR CHARLES NAPIER.—At a dinner to Sir Charles Napier, given by the Military Club, his Excellency is reported to have said,-" I hear there was an editor of a newspaper at the review the other day; I care very little what they say of me, I don't intend to take in any papers during the short time that I may stay in India, so they may say what they like."

AT THE OPIUM SALE, held May 14, Patne brought Rs. 1066, and Benares Rs. 1054, being an increase of Rs. 2-8 for Patna, at Rs. 30 for Benares, over the result of the preceding sale. proceeds of the sale were above thirty-one and a half lakhs.

THE BOOTT OF MOURTAN is said to amount to eighteen lakhs of rapees.

Mn. R. H. RATTRAT, late: a judge of the Sudder Court, who had been granted leave on sick cartificate to the Cape, has been ordered by the Governor-General to retire from the service on his

Mr. Spaintrours, the judge of Sylhet, has (it is said) strongly memorialized the Governor-General against the appointment of Mr. Mytton to succeed Mr. Dunber as commissioner of the Duccedivision, and that the Governor-General has transmitted the memorial to the Deputy Governor for consideration.

MESMERISM.—On Tuesday a tumour of seventy pounds weight was extirpated at the Mesmeric Hospital: The man was forty years of age, and of a wretched constitution. Immediately after the operation he woke up in a delirious and agitated state, became sick at stomach, and fainted. It was evident to the professional gentlemen present that if the man had been under the influence of chloroform he would have died on the spot, but he soon came round, and in the evening was strong and comfortable.-Hurkurs, May 18:

THE RANGE OF LAHORE is, it is said, to remain at Khatman-

FATAL ACCIDENT.—A party of ladies and gentlemen who were about to proceed to the N. W. on the accommodation-boat Sutledge, on the 28th of May, had paid a visit to the beat, and were about returning to the shore, when a Miss Hodgson lost her footing as she was stepping into the heat alongside the flat, fall into the river, sank immediately, and was drowned. The gentleman who accompanied her also fell into the water, but was saved. The accident is said to be attributable to the want of accommodation for embarking and disembarking passengers afforded by the company's flats.

THE REV. MR. McQUBEN -- We understand that the result of the reference to the army in the case of the furlough allowances of the Rev. Mr. McQueen, is the confirmation of the arrangement; made by the managers of the Military Orphan Fund, by a vote of twenty to one.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL .- We leave from a private letter, dated Simlah, the 12th of May, that Lord Dalhousic and his countess were in excellent health, and that his lerdship may pre-bably be expected to quit the hills for the presidency in November ment. A grand flare-up was talked of in honour of her Majesty's birthday.

SIR WILLIAM GOMM was expected to arrive at Calcutta by the Catherine Apoer, which was to leave the Mauritius on the 5th of AUCKLAND CIRCUS.-The cash balance in the hands of the trustees to the Auckland testimonial has been handed over to-Capt. Fraser, Fort William, to be applied to the construction of a pucka footpath within the Auckland Circus.

SIR CHARLES NAPIER left Calcutta yesterday, under the usual salate, at 11 P.M. in his eternal sola hat, a tusser coat, and a pair of white unmentionables, which appeared to have already done their duty on the previous day; while betwixt his finger and thumb he held a nosegay whose freshness had gone and fragrance had flown, but which, nevertheless, he ever and anon gave to his nose and took it away again. He arrived at the Chandpaul ghaut with the deputy governor (who was in full uniform) and suite. A few military officers came with the cortège also, and, so far as we could observe, one civil servant. Upon reaching the ghaut, Sir Charles took a cordial leave of Sir John Littler, and stepped into the soonamookee, rejecting the assistance of one of the dandees who officiously put out his hand to raise the Commander-in-chief into the boat. The aides-de-camp of his excellency and our deputy postmaster entered the boat with him, and the party lost no time in unmooring and setting out for Chinsurah, whence Sir Charles and his suite are to complete the remainder of their journey by dawk. The military secretary of his excellency followed in a separate boot, dressed as negligently as Sir Charles, and with a more fantastic head dress, for it bore the shape of an ordinary hat on an enormous scale (Sir Charles's is cut after the jockey fashion), and something that looked for all. the world like a bathing towel pared of its original dimeasions, was placed over it so that the borders in front overhung the wearer's face like a nun's veil, and kept flapping, flapping against his eyes continually; and so much did extraordinary headpiece disturb the use of his visual organs, that. he stumbled fearfully in mounting the prow of his boat, and might have suffered severely from a bad fall at least, but for the timele aid of one of the boatmen, who lent him a helping hand, and: safely brought him into the beat. One of the papers stated, on the occasion of Sir Charles's arrival here, that he was looking much better than it had been expected be would. If this was so, Sir Charles must have suffered not a little in health during his brief sojourn, for he appeared very pale and haggard yesterday. Hurkanu, May 23.

THE MEDAL -We observe that the late Communder-in-Chief: has, by a G. O. of the 12th May, called for nominal rolls of claimants for the Punjanh medal, which is to be distributed to all who served in a military capacity at any time during the late campaign within the territories then under the government of Maharajah Bulleep Singh. We understand that the medal order is to be medified: The medal will be as previously ordered; but clasps for battles will be added. We are told that this arrangement, for which the army have to thank Lord Gough, will afford general satisfaction.

MR. NASMYTH.—A contemporary announced yesterday, that Mr. Nasmyth, of the civil service, and Lieutenant Ravenscroft, a retired military officer we believe, had been drowned in the river at Chinsurah, by the upsetting of a boat in the squall of Saturday evening last: We also had the same statement from other quarters during the day; but we have since learned that Mr. Nasmyth escaped with life, and we infer from our information that only a sircar and a large Newfoundland dog, the latter tied to the boat, were lost by the accident. The boat, which was over-crowded, got into collision with the Kashijee, from which the passengers were landing, we believe, and hence the catastrophe.-Hurkaru, May 23, Assault Az Sha. - The chief mate of the John Woodall was charged by an European seaman, before Mr. Patten, yesterday, with an assault at sea. The chief mate stated that the complainant refused to go to the pump when the vessel was in dis-tress in a gale of wind; and that, when he tried to pull him to trees in argain as wind; and these, when in Lates to pair in the the pump, he bit him on the thumb, which provoked him to strike the man some-blows with his fist on the face; but this alleged provocation was not proved, and the assault appearing to have been severe, the chief mate was fined ten rupees.

Jumur. soon, See Mar. -" No news. Very cloudy weather all the hot season. Capt. Felconer, of the 46th regt. N.I. got a severe full from his horse on the parade ground of the regiment yesterday morning, the horse having rolled back backing and broken one of his ribs. He is, however, I am happy to say, out THE HEAD QUARTERS OF H. M.'s 70 BEGT, arrived at of danger."

THE DEFALCATIONS IN THE OFFICE OF THE LATE REGISTRAR. -The inquiries made a short time ago in the House of Commons respecting the defalcations in the office of the late registrar have in some measure been responded to in Calcutta, by active measures for the recovery of so much as there is any prospect of realizing, towards the reduction of the aggregate loss. In reply to the inquiries in the Lower House of Parliament, it was stated that, as the law stands at the present moment, neither the government of India, nor any other public body, can compel the defaulter to make good to the orphans and widows the sums which they have lost by his unsuccessful speculations; and that it is for the injured parties to take such steps for the recovery of their monies as they might consider judicious. It was also stated, that the usual sureties were taken, when Sir Thomas Turton was appointed registrar; but that some of these sureties were not in a position to discharge their respective bonds; and that even if they did pay, the sum would be far from equal to the defalcations. The executor of our late puisne judge, Sir Henry Seton, has commenced an action at law against the sureties of Sir Thomas Turton, for the recovery of the amount of their respective bonds. Rustomjee Cowasjee and the late Dwarkanauth Tagore were the sureties, each having bound himself in the sum of Rs. 50,000, that Sir Thomas Turton would faithfully discharge the trust reposed in him as registrar. The action has been brought against Rustomjee Cowasjee and the partners of the late firm of Carr, Tagorc, and Co., as the executors of Dwarkanauth Tagore. What the defence is to be, nobody knows; but it is scarcely necessary to say that both Rustomjee Cowasjee and Carr Tagore and Co. have retired from business. No step that we have yet heard of has been taken for the recovery of Sir Thomas Turton's own recognizance of Rs. 100,000; but it may be mentioned that of the Rs. 800,000, which the commissioners appointed to examine his accounts reported to be the aggregate sum of the defalcations, Sir Thomas has paid Rs. 100,000.—Hurkaru, May 22.

Benares Bank .- The Delhi Gazette informs us that "serious" disclosures are likely to be made at the meeting of the shareholders of the Benares Bank, which is to be held on the 6th proximo, and he hints that they are likely to pay dear for the apathy they have exhibited. We would fain hope that our contemporary is mistaken, for what will be said, if after all we have heard of the vast superiority of the Mofussil in the management of such institutions, not merely financial, but moral, a Mosussil bank should come down with a crash, involving all concerned in ruinous loss? We trust that no such exhibition awaits us, and that the directors will be able to demonstrate that the bank has been faithfully and ably conducted. If the result should be different, we rather think that joint-stock banks will be at a discount in India; and if the proprietors are called on to furnish another illustration of the advantages of unlimited responsibility in the sacrifice of their property, we suspect that in similar concerns, selling out will be the order of the day; and that despite all the ingenious arguments of the Delhi and the Agra Messenger in support of this unlimited responsibility, people will be shy of vesting their capital in banks on such a condition. - Ibid. May 31.

CHITTAGONG. - A correspondent writes from Chittagong, that that place had been visited by a tremendous hurricane, more violent than has been experienced since the year 1824; its effects have been terrible; the pukka houses of the residents, which are all built on the tops of little hills, had their verandahs completely carried away, and the doors, windows, and even brick parapets, were very much damaged; stables and out-houses of all descriptions were overthrown, and several valuable horses had to be dug out of the ruins; three out of the four pinnacles adorning the church tower were also blown down; the jetty of the Sudder Ghaut has been half broken down, and a large sloop lay between it and the shore; the thatched roofs of the government salt golahs were broken, and the rain which fell on the salt is said to have caused damage to the extent of five lacs of rupees.

PR HIBITION OF COMPANY'S SERVANTS JOINING TRADING SOCIETIES.—We have been told that a letter received per express from a well-informed quarter, announces the intention of the India House authorities to prohibit the connection of their servants in India with joint-stock or trading associations of any kind, and to give those now so engaged a year to make their arrangements for cutting the connection.—Hurkaru, June 2.

Staff of the Commander-in-Chief.—With the sanction of government, the undermentioned officers of the personal staff of his excellency the Commander-in-Chief will accompany his excellency to Simla, where head quarters will be established:-Mejor J. P. Kennedy, military secretary; Major W. M. G. McMurdo, aide-de-camp; Capt. H. W. Bunbury, acting aide-de-camp; Assistant-surgeon, A. Gibbon, surgeon.

THE 18TH AND 72ND N.I. have arrived at Ferozepore.

MR. VON CORTLANDT. - The Governor-General is pleased to appoint Mr. Von Cortlandt, late general in the service of the ahore government, to be deputy commissioner of the district of Dera Ghazee Khan.

ONE OF THE ASSASSINS Of Messrs. Agnew and Anderson, at Mooltan, has been detected, tried, and hanged. The subjoined description of the execution has been furnished by an eye-wit--" At the appointed time, the company of rifles arrived and formed a line facing the Eedgah; but outside the compound, some hundred yards or so, at about ten minutes to seven o'clock, No. 5 light field battery, being out for exercise, passed close to the gallows, Lieut. Keir in command. It was an imposing sight, for the battery is in first-rate order, both men and horses. At seven o'clock precisely, the murderer ascended the ladder, which was no very easy job, seeing that it was some dozen feet long, and at an elevation of about forty degrees. However, Goodhur Sing walked, or rather crawled, up very quietly, and stood still until the rope was adjusted, and on a given signal the drop fell, and the scoundrel was launched into eternity. He was a poor, miserable-looking wretch, middle-aged, with jet black hair and a long beard. Major Edwardes was present at the execution, and superintended it in his official capacity."

Works of utility in British India .- I speak only with reference to my own presidency-the North-western Provinces. Bengal is said to be a quarter of a century behind it in every symptom of improvement, except mere English education. the North-western Provinces, at least, cannot be applied the taunt, that we have done nothing, compared with the Muhammedan emperors, with respect to roads, bridges, and canals. Even here, in the very seat of their supremacy, we have hundreds of good district-roads where one never existed before; besides the 400 miles of trunk-road, which is better than any mail-road of similar extent in Europe, and to which the emperors never had anything to be compared. The bridge at Jaunpore is the only one that can enter into competition with our bridge over the Hindun, and would suffer greatly by the comparison; to say nothing of those over the Jua, the Khanaut, and the Kali-nadi. In canals we have been fifty times more Instead of wasting our supply of water on the frivoeffective. lities of fountains, we have fertilized whole provinces, which had been barren from time immemorial; and this even on the lines of which much was marked out by themselves, leaving out of consideration the magnificent works in progress in the Doab and Rohilkhund. The scientific survey alone of the Northwestern Provinces is sufficient to proclaim our superiority; in which every field, throughout an area of 52,000 square miles, is mapped, and every man's possession recorded. It altogether eclipses the boasted measurement of Akber, and is as magnificent a monument of civilization as any country in the world can produce. Finally, be it remembered that six centuries more have to elapse before anything like a comparison can be fairly instituted. It is to be hoped we shall not be idle during that long period.—Mr. H. M. Elliot.

THE NATIVE PRESS OF BENGAL.-No fewer than sixty-two papers have been started since the Durpun was commenced, of which forty-one are already extinct, and twenty-one still continue to solicit public support, with more or less success. these papers, only three or four appear to possess any considerable circulation, and even they cannot afford any adequate remuneration for the labours of the editor. The editors of the most influential native papers in Calcutta are known to be men of large experience, great intellectual and philological ability, and possessed of a thorough knowledge of their own language; yet we can scarcely congratulate them on their vocation. speak from long and bitter experience, when we affirm that the office of an editor of a native paper is, perhaps, the most thank-less, and certainly the worst remunerated, in Bengal. The natives are among the very worst paymasters in the world. In Bengal, everything is "to-morrow," and nothing "to day;" but when a demand for the arrears of subscription to a newspaper is made at the rich man's door, it is "to-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow, to the last syllable of recorded What may be the present circulation of all the twentyone papers, we have no means of ascertaining, with any degree of accuracy; but, unless times are greatly altered, they cannot, in the aggregate, exceed 2,000 copies. We think, moreover, it will be found that the entire sum paid by the rich, the great, the intellectual natives in the metropolis of British India, for the enjoyment of newspapers in their own tongue, does not exceed Rs. 15,000 a year, or £1,500. This is a very miserable return for thirty years of labour.—Friend of India.

Coal.—The Englishman informs us that, at Raneegunge, in the Burdwan coal district, a fine bed of coal has been discovered at a depth of about 450 feet below the soil.

Bogwangolah.—A letter from the banks of the Ganges, near Bogwangolah, dated the 5th of May, says:—"The factories in this quarter are crying out for rain, the last shower was in the middle of February; Bhaugulpore, Purneah, and parts of Malda, the same, a great deal of land remains to be sown; altogether prospects are not very promising. The folks in Kishnagur, with but few exceptions, have had to re-sow a large portion; some, however, have fine prospects. Jessore, and to the eastward, have still splendid prospects; Pubna is good; I hear great things of the Watsons' concerns." The Sudder Court has decided in an appeal case before it, that an indigo planter is entitled to sue for damages for waste committed on land cultivated by ryots to whom he has made advances.

JESUIT COLLEGE.—The Hurkaru states that Father Boulogne, the Roman Catholic priest of Chandernagore, has received orders to assist in the formation of a college to be dedicated to St. Francis Xavier. From this it would appear that the Jesuits are about to recommence operations in India, and have smoothed over the difficulties which were said to exist between the Order and the seculars.

MILITARY.—Two companies of the 10th N.I. were to march from Luknow to Cawnpoor on the 6th of May to take over treasure (two lakhs) from the latter to the former station. If we were not told that the number of men and officers was 224, we should have thought that our correspondent had made a mistake, but such sppears to be the state of the country, that nothing short of one man to every thousand rupees is required. A pretty comment this on the present or indeed the general rule in Oudh, and a proof that the Government, in resolving on taking charge of the country next year, has come to the only reasonable conclusion that can be adopted.

The head-quarters of the Sirhind division have been removed from Lodeeanah to Umballah, and will remain there till further orders.

The 50th regiment N.I. marched into Delhi on Monday morning, none the worse, it would appear, for their somewhat warm march, as they had only 50 sepons in hospital.

The 30th regiment N.I. arrived at Labore on the 4th inst, and were to resume their march immediately for Meerut, via Ferozpoor and Kurnal.

We understand Lieut. Col. Greene, of the engineers, was to retire from the service from the lat of the month; this promotes Major A. H. E. Boileau to the lieut. colonelcy.

The 2nd European regiment and 56th N. I. were to reach their destination, Lahore, on the 6th of May.—It will be seen by the extracts of a Lahore letter, published elsewhere, that H.M.'s 14th Light Dragoons are not going to Ferozpoor, but remain at the provincial capital.—Delhi Gazette, May 9.

THE LATE COLONEL CURETON.—A circular has been privately circulated to the friends of the late Colonel Cureton, of which the following is a copy:—

"With the approval of the Right Honourable the Commanderin-Chief, the comrades and friends of the late Colonel Cureton, c.s. adjutant-general of Her Majesty's forces in India, are invited to subscribe for the purpose of erecting a suitable monumental tablet in the parish church of the deceased as a memento of their esteem and respect.

"If sufficient funds be raised, it is also proposed to place a small tablet in the Simla church to the memory of one so well known and so universally esteemed throughout India."

As there are still many located in remote parts of the country, who would no doubt wish to join in the proposed mark of respect to the memory of the gallant officer, we have been requested to state that subscriptions for the object in view will be received by the secretary of the Simlah Bank, and the secretary of the North-Western Bank, at Meerut.—Mofussilite, May 15.

Lahore, May 10.—The 61st regiment N.I. are to march as LAHORE, May 10.—The 61st regiment N.I. are to march as soon as carriage can be procured to Govindghur, to relieve 1st regiment N.I. No military commission talked off here to try Moolraj. The 56th N.I. marched in a few days since, and took charge of the gates and ramparts occupied by the 18th N.I. Heat very great, a hot wind blowing. Sickness among the Europeans considerable, and funerals frequent. Nehal Singh Chajee confined for laughing at the secretary to the Board, whose diminutive stature seemed to have caused merriment. Mr. Mansel and Mr. John Lawrence having been falsely informed that Shere Singh had absconded, proceeded, without giving any notice to Ataree, but found Shere Singh there; an enemy of his named Sham Singh had spread this false report. The superintending surgeon of the division at Julunder does not reside at Lahore, where his presence is required at his post at the division head quarters. It is true Julunder is a finer climate, but the superintending surgeon's presence is required at Lahore, where he should reside as long as that place is the head quarters of the division. The three companies of her Majesty's 53rd foot and band left Lahore on the morning of the 7th for Rawul Pindee; the 2nd Europeans marched in on the 8th instant, minus their band. Joala Sahaie, vakeel of Moolab Singh of Jamoo, reached Lahore on the 8th inst. with a congratulatory message from his master on the happy termination of the war. Letters have been received in the city from various residents of Peshawur, expressing their fear of being oppressed by Hajee Mahummud, confidential moonshee of Major George Lawrence, the said moonshee having suffered much at the hands of the Peshawurees, during the late disturbances. Major Edwardes is to proceed to England with the Koh-i-Noor, his health being very indifferent, thus affording that gallant officer an opportunity of laying his laurels at the foot of the throne.

May 11.—The 61st N.I. have not yet marched to Govind-ghur for want of carriage. Sir Walter Gilbert sees no necessity for having a moveable brigade. He has seen too much of the stern realities of war to wish to play at soldiers, or harass troops unnecessarily. Sir H. Lawrence, too, does not think that the services of a moveable brigade will be required.—Delhi Gazette, May 16.

The 1st regt. N.I. having been relieved by the 61st N.I. were to march from Umritser to Lahore at 9 P.M. of the 15th May.

SIR HENRY LAWRENCE.—We regret extremely to learn that close application to the arduous duties of his office during the last few months has so materially affected the health of Sir Henry Lawrence, that he has been compelled to proceed, without delay, to Simlah, in the hope of recruiting himself a little during the extreme hot season. Sir Henry and Lady Lawrence were expected at Loodecanah on the 18th of May.

THE LATE MAJOR-GENERAL SIR ROBERT DICK.—A very handsome monument to the memory of the late gallant Major-General Sir Robert Dick, K.C.B., which was subscribed for by the officers of his division at the battle of Sobraon, and other friends in her Majesty's and the Company's service, has just been completed and placed in the parish church of Logierait, in which parish the estate of the late Sir Robert is situated; the marble work was executed by one of the first sculptors in London, and has given much satisfaction to all who have seen it. "The gallant conduct and heroic death of the lamented general will long be held in cherished remembrance by his fellow countrymen, as well as by his companions in arms."

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

APPOINTMENT OF A SIXTH CAPTAIN TO EACH REGT. OF LIGHT CAVALRY.

Simla, May 8th, 1839.— In obedience to the orders of the Hon. the Court of Directors, the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India is pleased to direct that a sixth captain be added to each regiment of light cavalry at the three Presidencies.

LORD GOUGH'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

Head-Quarters, Simla, May 16th, 1849.—His Exc. Gen. Sir Charles J. Napier, G.C.B., having announced his assumption of the office of commander-in-chief, General Lord Gough has now to take his last farewell, and bid his last adieu to the army of India, the command of which he has held for a period of nearly six years, and which he now resigns to his distinguished successor.

General Lord Gough has had the good fortune to command in chief, forces composed of portions of the army of India, in four memorable campaigns, China, Gwalior, the Sutledge, and lastly the Punjab. In every one of these campaigns the most brilliant results have been obtained—victory has followed victory—the termination of each campaign has brought with it increase of influence, of power, and of territory, to our Indian possessions, and of glory and renown to the army of India. It is to that army, to its valour its discipline, and the confidence Lord Gough is proud to think it has ever reposed in its leader, that his lord-ship mainly owes whatever of rank or of reputation he has latterly obtained, and he now relinquishes his command in the honest and heartfelt conviction that he has discharged his duty to his sovereign and to his country.

It would be impossible for Lord Gough to offer in connection with so much that is memorable, the full expressions of those opinions and feelings, which the arduous and protracted duties of his station have produced, but he desires that the whole army generally, and those officers and soldiers particularly who have more immediately served and fought under his guidance, will receive this his last and brief assurance of the deep and abiding interest he will ever feel in their welfare; and with the same warm feelings of regard, and earnest prayers for their honour and prosperity, with which Lord Gough took leave of the army of the Punjab, he now addresses his affectionate farewell to the army of India.

To the general officers and staff of the army, and to the head quarters staff of both her Majesty's and the East India Company's Service, as well as to his personal staff, the Commander-in-Chief deems it a most gratifying duty, incumbent upon him, to offer the expression of his warmest thanks for the very able support and assistance he has on all occasions invariably received from them in the discharge of his official duties during his long period of command.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

Home Department, Simla, May 18, 1849.—Intimation having been received by the Right Hon. the Governor General that his excellency Sir Charles Napier, G.C.B., assumed, on the 7th of May, the offices of Commander-in-Chief of H.M.'s and of the Company's forces of India, and took his seat as extraordinary member of the council in India, his lordship directs that all the honourstand distinctions paid to the Commander in-Chief in India shall be continued to his excellency General Lord Gough, G.C.B., until his departure for England.

REGIMENTS FOR THE PUNJAB.

Foreign Department, Simla, May 18, 1819. - The Right Hon. the Governor-General is pleased to direct that five regiments of cavalry and five of infantry shall be raised within the Punjab, according to instructions issued at the board of administration.

PROHIBITION TO LADIES PROCEEDING BEYOND LAHORE.

Head Quarters, May 4th, 1849.-Under instructions from army head quarters, dated 30th ultimo, No. 557, and in accordance with the wishes of Government, the Major-General desires that no ladies or soldiers' wives be permitted on any account whatever to proceed beyond Lahore.

The presence of ladies and soldiers' wives in camps and stations in a newly acquired and unsettled country, being produc-tive of extreme inconvenience and embarrassment to the state, all parties will see the propriety of strictly complying with this peremptory order. Should any ladies or soldiers' wives have proceeded to reside with their husbands, they are to be required immediately to return to Lahore, or within the provinces under such instructions, as will be conveyed to officers commanding districts and stations beyond the Ravee, who are hereby required to report to the deputy assistant adjutant general of the division what number of ladies and soldiers' wives have been ascertained to have proceeded beyond that river.

MADRAS RAILWAY COMMITTEE.

At a meeting on the 2nd June, of the committee appointed at the public meeting of the 29th May.

J. F. Thomas, Esq., G. Norton, Esq., W. Elliot, Esq., W. U. Arbuthmot, Esq., Capt. Collyer, J. Thomson, Esq., Capt. Bell, Capt. Hitchens, J. Ouchterlony, Esq., Major Pears, C.B.

RESOLUTIONS. 1. With reference to one of the immediate objects enjoined apon the committee, by resolution 3 of the public meeting, viz., to prepare and digest a scheme for the formation of a Joint Stock Company," it is the opinion of this committee that, as intelligence has reached Madras of active measures being taken in London, to revive the old Madras and Wallajahunggur Railway Company to which, the public of Madras formerly gave their adhesion—they will best follow out the designs of the meeting, by entering into active co-operation with such revival company, and that steps be cocordingly taken to enter into communication with its managing committee for that purpose.

2. That in the opinion of this committee, it is essentially necessary for the welfare of any railway company established, that its construction and working should be under the supervision of a local branch committee of shareholders; and that such opinion be communicated to the above revival company.

3. That a letter be addressed to the Court of Directors in conformity with the resolutions of the public meeting, soliciting the support of the honourable court, and dwelling upon the peculiar benefits to Madras of which a railway running to the westward would be productive, and the great national advantages for con-struction offered in this line, and its value as a test of the remunerativeness of railways in favourable localities in India. That it be represented further, that it is deemed the interests of a company would be materially furthered, by the local officers in India being allowed to give their temporary assistance to the undertaking, such being extended of course without involving any charge to the East-India Company.

4. That in communicating with the committee of the revived Madras and Wallajahnuggur Railway Company they be informed that, in the opinion of this committee, a single line of rail should 'alone be constructed in the first instance, leaving the formation of a double line to follow experience of the working of the railway, and sufficient land being taken up at once to admit of this

Captain Collyer having volunteered his services to superintend a survey of a portion of the road.

5. That advantage be taken of Captain Collyer's obliging offer, and that funds be appropriated for completing the survey of about 15 miles of a line from Madras towards Wallajahnuggur.

6. That the following gentlemen be requested to join the com-

Major Smith, Engineers; and J. Lushington, Esq. 7. That the foregoing proceedings be published.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CHOLERA prevails so severely in the Mysore district that travellers are cautioned against proceeding by that route.

POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION .- A special meeting of the directers of the Polytechnic Institution, numerously attended, was held at the rooms on the Mount Road, on the 28th May. A resoluexpedient to secure a building, either by purchase or otherwise, for the use of the institution, was proposed and carried, and a sub-committee composed of Messrs. Ouchterlony, Austruther, and Reilly, was appointed to examine and report upon the most eligible site for the erection of the proposed building. The sub-mittee have also been requested to forward an application to Government, in connection with the matters brought before the meeting.

Convension of a Hindoo:—On Thursday evening last a Hindoo youth, of the Naidoo caste, aged nineteen years, received Christian baptism at the General Assembly's Institution, in the presence of the Reverend Messrs. Hamilton and MacFarlane, and other gentlemen. The young man had been for several years connected with the institution, and attended school as teacher to one of the junior classes. He remained away from home a few days previous to his baptism, expressing a desire to be admitted into the Christian Church, and refused stances had been given by the Reverend Mr. Grant. On Thursday evening, the promises were surrounded by a mob of natives, who had accompanied his relatives to the place, and although the latter evinced no disposition to create a disturbance, but had willingly accepted the invitation of Mr. Grant to enter the institution, and converse with their child if they pleased, their friends seemed differently disposed, and the consequence was that the premises were assailed on all sides with showers of brickbats, till almost every pane of glass had been shivered to pieces, and the windows and doors of the house otherwise damaged. Several policemen were called to the spot, and these, with the assistance of a constable, succeeded in dispersing the crowd, and quiet was restored before seven o'clock. The new convert remains with Mr. Grant .- Athenaum, May 19.

BOMBAY. MISCELLANEOUS.

ARRIVAL OF THE ENGLISH MAIL OF THE 25TH APRIL.—
The H. C. steam frigate Feroze, Capt. J. Frushard commanding, with the London mails of the 25th April, anchored in the harbour about seven o'clock on Thursday morning. The P. and O. Co.'s steam ship Haddington arrived at Aden at a little after six o'clock on the evening of the 16th, and the Feroze having received the Bombay portion of the mails, left on the 17th, at 4.30 a.m.

THE RIGHT HON. THE GOVERNOR leaves the Mahabuleshwur hills for Sattara at daybreak this morning. The secretaries and their establishments were to have left yesterday at noon. lordship will remain at Sattara until the 4th, when he proceeds to Poona. On arriving at Poona, the chief secretary, Mr. Malet, returns to the presidency, on being relieved by Mr. Secretary Colonel Melvill continues with the governor during Courtney. his stay at Poona .- Bombay Times, May 30.

Two more Detachments of H. M.'s 83rd Foot have arrived. mustering betwirt them eleven officers, three ladies, 369 men, 36 women, and 29 children. The Zion Hope, Marian, and Ursula, with the remainder of the corps, cannot be looked for before the end of June at the earliest, as they only left Cork on the 21st March.—The ship Tulloch Castle, with the last division of H.M.'s 64th on board, is long overdue, as she has been out since the 13th January, upwards of four months and a half!

OFFICERS HOLDING STAFF APPOINTMENTS AT THE PRESIDENCE We understand that those officers holding staff appointments at the presidency, whose corps are at Peshawur, have been directed to remain there for the present. Dr. Doig, field surgeon to the force at Peshawur, has, we believe, reached Kurrachee; he will in all likelihood return to the presidency to take up his duties as surgeon to the 2nd battalion artillery by the steamer Bombay, which leaves to-day for Scinde. It is expected that some of the other staff officers will travel round by land via Hydrabad and Bhooj, but the journey will be an exceedingly uncomfortable one at this season of the year.

THE COMMISSARY-GENERAL, We believe, contemplates making a tour of inspection in the deccan and southern division, on the termination of the monsoon, during which, it is said, Major Davidson will reside in Poona, whither he proceeds from the presidency in a short time.

THE SHIP Earl of Bulcarras, from Cork, the 13th February, with detachments of H. M.'s 64th and 83rd foot on board, came into harbour May 25th. The former is commanded by Major Western, and consists of ten officers, 256 men, 28 women, and 43 children; the latter under charge of Lieut. Wright, mustesing 3 officers, 83 men, 7 women, and 8 children.

An Onder appears in this day's paper, May 26 (No. 299 of 1849, dated 22nd May), intimating that the appoinments of subassistant commissary-general, commissariat agent, assistant auditor-general, and assistant secretary to the Military Board, are in future never to be conferred on officers above the rank of subalterns; and that the latter berth is to be invariably vacated on the occupant attaining his company.

PAUNCHGUNNY .- At the recommendation of the Medical Board, an intelligent assistant-apothecary is about immediately to be dispatched to Paunchgunny, with a view of remaining there throughout the ensuing monsoon, provided with meterological instruments, of which a full and careful register is to be kept. Should the result of the observations go to prove that Paunchgunny is fitted for the residence of Europeans throughout the year, it is we believe the intention of the board to recommend that a sanatarium be for ned there for sick soldiers. having which such a sanatarium would effect to Government would be immense, while the number of lives which would be saved would in all human probability be very great. At present when a soldier's health is completely ruined he has to be sent home at a heavy charge, and another got out at an equally large outlay to take his place. Were there a locality within reach where his restoration to health could be effected, both items of expence would be done away with, and the state be so much the gainer. As it is, how few of those sent home for change of air even reach England; and even of those who do survive the voyage, how few ever return to India. We trust the experiment will be fairly tried, and have no fear that the result will amply compensate Government for the outlay which will require to be made for carrying it through.

THE ANNEXATION OF SATTARA is completed, the territory having been amalgamated with the Bombay Presidency.

Ma. R. HARDY. - The Bombay Telegraph and Courier regrets to hear that Mr. R. Hardy, of the Bombay Civil Service, has been suspended by Government, pending a reference to the Hon. Court of Directors, with the view of effecting his removal from the service, in consequence of some pecuniary transactions of a questionable character in which he has unfortunately become involved.

CHIEF JUSTICE HULME has recently received a portion of a handsome service of plate which had been subscribed for him by the community of Hong-Kong, as a mark of their esteem for his public and private character.

AN IMPORTANT CAPTURE OF PIRATICAL VESSELS Was made by H.M.'s steamer Inflexible in April. It took place near the Great Lema. Two large junks well armed, and forty five Chinamen captives were taken; the latter being in their own boats under surveillance of the junks. One of the junks was found to be laden with a very valuable cargo of oil. The captured Chinamen stated that their boats had been seized by the pirates who had murdered some of their comrades and taken the others prisoners. The pirates themselves all escaped.

THE SHIPPING AT HONG-KONG.—The Overland Friend of China, in the course of a long leading article, has the following remarks on the undue control that has been exercised over the shipping at Hong-Kong by the marine magistrate Pedder: "Under the Merchant Seaman's Act, Mr. Pedder has been exercising unlimited control over the shipping; and as we are net. sure that his name is on the commission of the peace at all, it is questionable whether his acts are legal. If Mr. Pedder is in the commission of the peace he can settle disputes between masters and crews in a summary way; but so can any other of the sixteen justices, and they neglect their own interest if they are slack in acting upon powers bestowed upon them by an Act of Parliament. We have already shewn that in cases of assault two justices require to be on the bench. If we are not much mistaken, if ther records of the Marine Court were searched it would be observed that Mr. Pedder did not always comply with this formality, though latterly he has been aided by Mr. Holdforth or Mr. Inglis, two of the four paid magistrates, when two justices are required.

We would recommend that the Marine Court be discontinued entirely; we have shewn that the appointments of marine magistrate and harbour master are incompatible; while private practice as a surveyor on the part of the harbour master and marine magistrate leads to suspicions of corruption. We only require one Police Court-but let it be essentially AN ENGLISH POLICE Court.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

WEDNESDAY, July 25, 1849.

It is lamentable to observe how much of late years an indifference to strict moral obligation has spread, like a gangrene, throughout the better classes of society in this country, and how much greater, in consequence, appears the disparity of punishment for breaches of that obligation awarded respectively to individuals in the upper and the lower ranks. It is the boast of our jurisprudence, that the law is no respecter of persons; that high and low are equal in its sight. This is, perhaps, true, in relation to well-defined offences; a murderer or a highwayman, whether a lord or a peasant, would be dealt with alike. There are, however, offences to which society claims a kind of right to affix a denomination, and it is with respect to these that the disparity is so apparent.

In illustration of our remark, it would be sufficient to mention the revelations recently made of railway misdoings; the disclosures of misappropriations of the capital subscribed by shareholders, either to the payment of dividends, in order to delude the public as to the state of the concern, or to purposes not sanctioned by those whose property it was; and of still more culpable acts, namely, the diversion of profits from the proprietors to the pockets of the directors. To take the most venial act, that of paying dividends out of the capital, we have a judicial declaration, by the kighest court of judicature in the realm, the House of Lords, in the case of "Burnes v. Pennell," July 16, that this proceeding is not merely a falsehood, but a fraud, for which the parties would be indictable. Lord Campbell said: "Supposing a company was not worked to a profit, and a dividend were made, and were made out of capital, it was quite clear that a gross fraud was committed, and the directors making such a dividend were not only liable to a civil action, but were, in his opinion, guilty of a conspiracy, for which they might be indicted." Lord Brougham concurred in this opinion:

"Most sincerely did he agree that it was a wicked and false custom that had obtained of making and paying dividends out of capital instead of profits, and so leading the world to imagine that the profits of the particular concern were large, when, in point of fact, there was a loss upon the transactions of the company. Such payments were fraudulent and a false representation, and were a good ground for having recourse to a much severer proceeding than a mere civil action."

Other acts, however, are charged against directors of railway companies, nominatim, by committees of their own constituents, which differ from ordinary embezzlement only in the prodigious magnitude of the amount, and the daring and shameless manner in which they were committed.

The Report of a Select Committee of the House of Lords, appointed to consider the best method of effecting an audit of railway accounts,—and we may remark, by the way, that the horror of such audit by railway boards, which has accomplished the defeat of the Audit of Railway Accounts Bill, speaks trumpet-tongued,—gives some details respecting a certain railway company, which, in other times, would raise astonishment that such a system of fraud or illegality could find agents amongst men moving in a respectable sphere of life.

shame,—though one of the parties in the case just referred to admits that his conduct "cannot be justified," and even George Hudson is ready to disgorge what is discovered to be misappropriated by him; but what punishment is to fall upon these offenders? None, that we can find. No proceedings of even a civil character appear to be meditated against the directors we have referred to, "who had established for their own convenience a system of hieroglyphics which completely baffled the inquiries of the company and eluded the curiosity of the auditors."

In the Times newspaper, of July 6th, which contains a review of the Report and of the conduct of the directors of the North Wales Company, there is a report of a charge made at the Police Court of Southwark against one of the large family of Smiths, for illegally pawning the watch of a West-India captain. It appears that the parties were casually brought together, just as the shareholders and directors of a railway company might be; that they went to a theatre, and the skipper intrusted his watch to Smith, who promised to deposit it in the hands of the landlord of the public-house where they had dined together; in other words, Smith became his baillee, as railway directors become the baillees of the share-money placed at their command. Smith deposited the watch with the landlord, and so far fulfilled his trust; but he afterwards proceeded to the house, got possession of the watch and pledged it; and the directors of the North Wales Company, we are told, in one of their operations, in spite of a legal impediment, "advanced 25,000l. of the shareholders' money to themselves as directors of the Richmond Company, and then sold the latter line to themselves, or some of themselves, as directors of the South-Western." however, the analogy ends. Mr. Smith, "a well-dressed, middle-aged man," said he had given the complainant his note of hand to pay the "debt," and this the complainant admitted; but the magistrate refused to consider the transaction as a debt, sentenced Smith to a penalty, besides paying the value of the watch, or in default of payment of the penalty, imprisonment, and if the value of the watch was not paid within three days of the expiration of the imprisonment, he was to be "once publicly whipped within the precincts of the gaol." In the case of the directors, no sentence impends over them of either restitution, penalty, imprisonment, or whipping. They are denounced, it is true, in newspapers, and so is Smith; but this does not affect their character or position in society; whereas Smith will be ruined.

Here, we think, there is an infirmity, not, perhaps, in our system of law, which can be set in motion by no public prosecutor, but in the tone of our society, which practically establishes a difference in favour of the greatest criminals, men who do mischief upon the largest scale, without those palliations of guilt, extreme poverty and urgent temptation. But the misdoings of railway directors, however gigantic the scale, in a moral and social view, fade into insignificance when compared with those of certain public officers in India. The comparative apathy with which the frauds of Sir Thomas Turton, in his capacity of Ecclesiastical Registrar in the Supreme Court in Bengal, have been regarded, both here and in India, is one of the strongest proofs of that indifference to the duties of moral obligation amongst the upper classes to which we referred in the outset. We were told by the Friend of India, at the time, that "the public of Calcutta stand up for the rights of caste, and are resolved that the respectable men, who have inflicted such deep injury upon the fortunes of thousands, and disgraced the national character, shall not be visited with the punishment which is measured out to petty villains." We have no desire to bear hard upon an individual,-though there is nothing whatever in Sir T. Turton's case of palliation or excuse; but if the Smiths are to be flogged, we see no reason why the Turtons should have their infirmities, from which the public suffer, passed over with maudlin tenderness and silence. Here was a man placed in a post of great trust and responsibility, with a salary of 6,000l. a year, appropriating to his own purposes an enormous amount of money, said to be 90,000l., lodged in his hands in transit, which the parties were compelled to pay to him, and which it was his duty to invest for their benefit. The result has been loss to between 2,000 and 3,000 persons, more than half of whom are widows and orphans of officers, from the colonel to the corporal, who have fallen in action, or died in the service of their country, and who may be reduced thereby to beggary.

This is bad enough; but the incidents attending the transaction, showing the deceptions practised to conceal the fraud, greatly enhance its moral turpitude. We were told by the Bombay Times at the time, -- and this has never been to our knowledge contradicted,—that Sir T. Turton and his assistant embarked in trade with the money intrusted to their care, and lost very severely by the Union Bank; that when directed by the Chief Justice to produce their books and exhibit the Government Paper in which the money was said to be invested, paper was borrowed from a native merchant, and exhibited as that belonging to the Registrar; that it was immediately lodged by the Chief Justice in the Treasury, when the fact became known, by the party from whom it was borrowed making application for his own! The discovery of the defalcation of Sir T. Turton was detected in February, 1848, when he resigned his situation. At this time he must have known his condition; yet we find amongst the debtors to the Indian Laudable Society, "about whom," says the Report to the Policy Holders, on the 14th February, 1848, "any anxiety need not be felt for payment in full," the name of Sir T. Turton!

The sufferers by this man's misconduct very naturally inquire who is to reimburse them. Sir Thomas, of course, cannot; the security given by him is to the amount of 10,000l. only, and of the sureties, one, at least, is said to be unable to pay. Her Majesty's Government repudiate responsibility; so do the East-India Company, for they had no voice in the appointment and no control over the conduct of a registrer in a Supreme Court. It is resolved, therefore, to establish a claim upon the revenue of India.

Now this unfortunate revenue, thus made a convenient milch-cow, has already discharged the liabilities, incurred in a similar way, of a Madras Registrar, the notorious Gilbert Ricketts, and if this second claim be established, upon the ground of precedent, all such losses must in future be so repaired, and what is this but to hold out an open encouragement to fraud? In Ricketts' case, the parties concerned in preventing the misappropriation might be said to have been taken by surprise; there was no provision in the Act under which he was appointed that the Registrar should give any security, and the sum total of his defalcations was about 40,000l. only. This instance should have awakened the authorities to a vigilance which was not exerted until too late. It was well known that Sir T. Turton was connected with the Union Bank, for he constantly spoke at the meetings; it is said that "the judges were publicly warned of the dangerous trade carried on by the Master in Equity,"—Mr. W. P. Grant, another defaulter,—"two years before the final catastrophe occurred; but they would not interfere." Again; every other registrar of the Courts in India, we are told, is obliged to produce a list of the estates under their custody every six months, yet no list was presented by Sir T. Turton from 1843 till 1847.

Under these circumstances, it is our opinion that Parliament should entertain no proposition for saddling the innocent revenues of India with the amount of plunder by a public servant, until, in the first instance, he is subjected to civil or criminal proceedings; until his sureties pay the last farthing of their bond, and until the judge who appointed Sir Thomas Turton, and the judges by whose neglect he was enabled to carry on his systematic dishonesty, contribute in proportion to their culpability; whatever then remains due to the unfortunate sufferers should be defrayed out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom; for, as the Ecclesiastical Registrar is an officer of the Supreme Court, which would resent, and has resented, any interference on the part of the East-India Company with matters within its jurisdiction as an intolerable insult, and even a high misdemeanour, it would be a disgrace to the English Government, that appointed these judges, to sneak out of its consequent liabilities, and shabbily cast them upon the revenues of India.

Since the above was written, we find by intelligence brought by this mail, that the executor of a late puisne judge of Bengal has commenced an action against two natives, one of whom is a surety of Sir T. Turton, and the other an executor of another surety, to recover the amount of their bonds. So far good. But it is added that no step has been taken to recover Sir T. Turton's own recognizance, of Rs. 100,000. This is not right. The two natives are comparatively innocent; Sir Thomas is the really guilty man, and he will escape.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.
" Palmam qui meruit, ferat."

Sir,—I doubt not that the Indian army, and their brethren in arms now in England, have awaited with anxiety the distribution of rewards and honours to those gallant men who have brought the war in the Punjab to a successful close. I have expected that a more able pen would adventure a few remarks upon the public announcement of them. Being disappointed in this expectation, allow me, through your valuable journal, to draw the attention of the country to the unequal measure that has been dealt or doled out to Major-General Sir Walter Raleigh Gilbert, K.C.B; an officer than whom there does not exist a more zealous, energetic, and devoted one in either the British or Indian military service, fertile though both be in men of transcendant merit; and whose splendid services in settling the remnants of the Sikh rebels, and driving the intrusive forces of the Affghans across the Indus, without the risk of a general action, or the loss of a soldier, has been the theme of unqualified admiration, not alone in the country to which he does such bonour, but on the continent of Europe. These have been bonour, but on the continent of Europe. merely the last of a long train of active and gallant services. Sir Walter Raleigh Gilbert served with his immortal regiment, the old 15th Bengal native infantry, during all the arduous cam-paigns of Lord Lake in 1803, 1804, 1805; campaigns which have so vastly extended the renown and the empire of Britain; and latterly in the several sanguinary conflicts with the Sikhs, when violating our frontier by crossing the Sutlej in 1845. For such services he has only received the Grand Cross of the Bath, while, for services certainly of not more importance, Sir Harry

I believe I utter the universal voice of disappointment and regret at such neglect. Is it thus a grateful country rewards one of her most meritorious sons? Is this the measure and estima-tion of his services by her Majesty's Ministers? But such was the treatment a Nelson received, and we can only wonder and We have, however, the indignant consulation of the complain. noble bard

" Cæsar's triumph shorn of Brutus' bust Did but of Rome's best son remind her more."

The gallant descendant of Raleigh would have done well to meet the proffered honour by declining it, if such alone be the token of the estimation of his military achievement. Let me express a hope that her Majesty's Government and the gallant and truly excellent Chairman of the India Directors, Major-General Sir Archibald Galloway, will not allow the opportunity to escape of doing themselves honour, and rewarding a hero nurtured in their own battlefields, by conferring upon Sir Walter Raleigh Gilbert the command of the forces at Bombay, now vacant by the resignation of Sir Willoughby Cotton. Such an act would show that fifty years of devoted service, of no ordinary nature and value in a trying climate, is appreciated, would do equal henour to those who give and him who receives, and heal the bitter feelings the incommensurate recognition of the services of Sir Walter Raleigh has elicited. Suffer one to whom his merits are well known, from having personally shared his early toils and dangers in India, to beseech your powerful advocacy in aid of this weak expression of the sentiments of a large body of the officers of the Indian army now in England.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

-In a former number of your journal, there is a letter, to which my attention has been called, upon the subject of Indian patronage, and the name of a Director introduced, in connection with the Kensington proprietary school. As the letter evidently conveys reflections upon other Directors, who have not thought it consistent with their duty to follow the example of him who is the subject of panegyric, it becomes proper, in justice to many kind and disinterested men, to offer a few words upon the Although principle involved in a system held up for imitation. cadetships are bestowed by Directors in their individual capacity, I do not think it either a wise or benevolent practice for a portion of Indian patronage to be used in support of local inte-The Director alluded to may be a proprietor of this school, and seek to further its interests in a manner which may be thought unfair and invidious to other academies. I can duly appreciate the liberality of the Court of Directors in appropriating certain patronage to time-honoured public schools and universities of the country, in which may be found many poor students to whom an Indian appointment would be a magnificent boon, and whose course of education, while ensuring a high standard of learning, might also be shaped to include the exigencies of such an appointment. I can also admire the graceful act of a Director who confers an appointment upon the school in which he may have derived those elements of literature and science by the aid and right application of which he has reached the height of present fame; but I cannot regard in the same light the fostering of a joint stock school by means of patronage which may be said to be held in public trust, and not as an instrument for the promotion of local petty interests.

Medals for the Indian Army. - In answer to a question from

Mr. Hame, Sir J. C. Hobhouse said that the rule laid down with regard to the distribution of medals to the officers and soldiers of the Indian army was, that no medale were so granted unless the Commander-in-Chief, or the most distinguished officers engaged in the same battles, had also received some similar mark of distimetion.

EAST-INDIA COLLEGE, HAILEYBURY.

Friday, the 29th ult., being the day appointed for closing-the first term of the year 1849, a deputation from the Court of. Directors of the East-India Company visited the College, for the purpose of receiving the Report of the Principal, and of distributing the medals and prizes awarded to the successful competitors in the various branches of Oriental, Classical, and European literature.

A special train left the Bishopsgate station of the Eastern Counties Railway at half-past ten o'clock; and on the arrival-of the Directors and the visitors at Haileybury, they proceeded to the lodge, to pay their respects to the Principal (the Rev. H. Melvill). The Directors then repaired to the Councilroom, where they received the following satisfactory Report from the Rev. the Principal:—

"The Principal has much satisfaction in reporting to the Hon. the Finance and Home Committee, that all the students, sixteen in number, constituting the Fourth Term, have been found duly qualified for quitting College. Fifteen have obtained honours, in other words, have exceeded in their acquirements what is required by the Statutes. Of these fifteen, no fewer than thirteen have attained the rank of highly 'distinguished.'

"In the whole College,—of the sixty-nine students who have succeeded in passing the examination,—fifty-two have obtained honours, thirty-three (or considerably more than half) being highly 'distinguished.'

"The number of prizemen is sixteen,—a number sufficiently large to show that the honours have been keenly contested, though in several cases the student is literally loaded with prizes.

"The number of failures is six,—a number which certainly." bears no considerable proportion to the whole number of students; but which sufficiently shows that our College system, whilst it develops talent and rewards industry, is also successful:

in detecting incompetence and punishing idleness.

The attention to the European departments has been very Out of fifty-four students, for example, who have attended lectures in political economy and history, fifty-one have obtained the mark either of great or good proficiency. The Principal also observes, with much satisfaction, that more than usual attention has been given to the department of mathematics,—a department which has been comparatively too often.

"The Committee will hear with surprise, but at the same time with pleasure, that the very large number of forty-two essays were sent in by competitors for the prize in English Com-These essays, with few exceptions, may fairly be pronounced to have been in a high degree creditable to the industry and ability of the authors; and the inference seems fair that, where more than half the students thus add voluntarily to their: labours, there must be in the body much of that intellectual activity which gives promise of a good race of civilians.

Whilst the Principal is happy to be able to speak thus favourably of the European departments, he regrets that the condition of the Oriental classes has not been found equally satis-The Oriental visitor remarks that, in all, a proportion of the students have entitled themselves to creditable notice, but that a larger number than usual have taken but little pains to merit commendation.

A few students have very meritoriously extended the field of their attainments by the study of languages which do not form a part of the usual course. Mr. J. Colvin has made a very great advance in the cultivation of Arabic; Messrs. Hammond and Chapman very creditable progress in Hindi, and Mr. Mus-

"With regard to the state of discipline throughout the term, it cannot fail to be satisfactory to the Committee to know that, although some few of the students have not adhered so closely as could have been wished to the regulations of the place, no case has arisen requiring a severe exercise of authority. On the part of the great majority of the students, the term has been passed in cheerful compliance with the rules of the College, so that the task of government has been made easy by their orderly deportment. "HENRY MELVILL, P. C.

" East-India College, June 29, 1849."

After receiving the Report, the deputation proceeded to the Examination-hall, where the professors and students had siready assembled. The chair was occupied by Major-gen. Sir Archibald. Galloway, K.C.B., Chairman of the Hon. Court of Directors, who, together with the following Directors, formed the deputation: — John Shepherd, Esq., Deputy-Chairman; Charles Mills, Esq.; Henry St. George Tucker, Esq.; Henry Shank, Esq.; Russell Ellice, Esq.; Francis Warden, Esq.; Sir Henry Willock, K.L.S.; Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart., M.P.; Lieut.-col. Mr. Smyth read his Prize Essay, which purposed to "Show, by historical examples, that events, in themselves disastrous, have frequently led to the greatness and eventual prosperity of nations." The Essay (which was characterized by eloquent and The Essay (which was characterized by eloquent and forcible illustration) commenced by alluding to the strong aversion to calamity universally evinced by man,—an aversion which, although not unnatural, was inconsistent with the "uses of adversity." In the history of God's ancient people, and in the Christian revelation, there were alike facts and statements tonding to show that disappointment and sorrow were often the natural forerunners of successes and rejoicing; and this was a view of the subject fully borne out by human experience. In the natural world, also, the lesson was taught by the decay of autumn and the storms of winter, which, with unvarying regalarity, renewed the vigour and revived the beauty of creation. After these preliminary remarks, the Essay proceeded to show, from classical history, that "events, in themselves disastrous," had promoted the prosperity of nations. The same rule applied to France and England,-to France, whose wars with English princes resulted in the union and strengthening of her native chiefs, and enabled her, when the contest had ceased, to take a leading place amongst the countries of Europe; nor was it difficult to imagine that, had the result been otherwise, -had England been the victor,—calamities, which had been avoided, might have arisen. The Norman princes of England must have felt great attachment for France, and had they succeeded in uniting the nations into one kingdom, it was not improbable that they might have favoured France to the injury of England, and reduced the latter country to the position of an appanage to the French crown; thus depriving the world of those great advantages which had arisen from English power and influence, the manifestation of which began in the foundation of our noble colonial empire, immediately after the last French citadel was The eminent position of the Netherlands was also lost to us. traced to the stimulus which her attachment to the reformed faith derived from the galling tyranny of Spain; and it was urged that Spain itself would have remained in insignificance, if her energies had not been awakened to uproot the dominion of the Moslem. The Essay concluded by a reference to our Indian empire, which, opposed at the first by misfortunes of no common character, had now risen into unequalled grandeur and importance, and was the means of extending to the population of an enormous territory advantages, the extent of which it was impossible to calculate.

Mr. Morris read a translation, by himself, into Hindustanî, of a passage from Colonel Broughton's Letters from a Mahratta

Camp.

Mr. Breeks read a translation, by himself, into Teloogoo, of a Mr. Breas tead a translation, by himself, into Sanscrit, of Mr. Hammond read a translation, by himself, into Sanscrit, of a passage from Milton's Paradise Lost, commencing with,

" Fair consort, the hour Of night, and all things now retired to rest."

The reading of the English Essay and of the several Oriental translations was received with much applause.

The Chairman then distributed the prizes, making some complimentary remarks to those of the students who had been extraordinarily successful, and expressing a hope that the industry and talents they had exhibited in the College might be successfully exerted in that ample and important sphere of labour in which they were to be employed.

The students, as they came up to receive their prizes, were warmly cheered by their colleagues. At the close of the distribution,

Rank of Students leaving College, June, 1849.

BENGAL. Morris. Hammond. Palmer. First Class ..... Hogg. Bird. Mc Donell. H. D. Robertson. Egerton. Second Class ....... Jackson. Molony. Third Class ..... Elliot. First Class ...... Breeks. Wylie. Walter.

The Chairman then rose and addressed the students to the following effect :-

Gentlemen Students,—It is with much satisfaction I have the pleasure of meeting you here this day, because the Court of Directors have received from the Rev. Principal a favourable report, not only of the assiduity with which, with very few exceptions, you have prosecuted your studies, but of the exemplary manner in which you have conformed to the rules and discipline of the College. Gentlemen, this was your duty. was your duty; and as high-minded youths of England, you have You knew it performed that duty well. In the name of the Court of Directors, therefore, I now express to you their cordial approbation of your exemplary conduct. I will not on this occasion name those who have been less industrious, because I am sure they will themselves desire to retrieve their lost time. But I will say to you, gentlemen, as might be expected, the progress you have made in your studies has been in proportion to your diligence. In Mathematics and in Sanscrit this has been seen; and no less than forty-two essays, most of them highly creditable, were sent in for the English prize. This is praiseworthy, and I am sure it will give you pleasure, when you hear me express, which I now do, to the highly gifted and distinguished Principal, and to the distinguished Professors of this College, the unqualified approbation of the Court of Directors of the manner in which they have performed their arduous and important labours. (Applause.) The Principal of this College stands, whilst you are here, in the room of your parents and guardians. It is his duty to watch over the moral and religious training of your youthful minds, as well as your progress in the acquisition of science and learning. If in this scientific and religious country there was one man, whom the Court of Directors could have selected, better qualified than any other for the discharge of his high duties, that man is your Principal. Oh, my young friends, neglect not the advice of such a man; forget not his counsel! Listen to the instruction which your distinguished Professors so anxiously desire to communicate to you, that so you may be worthy of that noble service of which you are destined to become members. observe by the Report, that sixteen students have been declared qualified to proceed to India, and eventually to take a part in the administration of that government. The Government of India is one of those wonderful instruments which the Almighty has raised up for the civilization of our fellow-creatures. It is purpose of this institution to train you for taking a part in that government — a government which rules with beneficence, moderation, and justice; and which instructs in civilization and science one hundred millions of our tellow-subjects. If it be an object of ambition with you, then, to take a distinguished part in so noble a course, let me beseech you, my young friends, to omit no effort in order to attain those qualifications for the discharge of your high duties, which this institution affords you. If you neglect this, the day will come when you will lament so grievous a misfortune! You now go home to rejoice the hearts of your parents and guardians, by telling them of your success. I trust you leave this College with a lively sense of its value. That value is demonstrated by its fruits in the many distinguished men from it, who, with unequalled success, have administered the government of a great empire. Let me entreat those of you who return to College, to do so with an ardent desire to prose. cute successfully what remains of your course of study, is no part of that course which is not highly valuable. those who in India will be employed in the revenue and judical branches of the service, a knowledge of the system of revenuenot only of modern but of ancient times - especially of that which not only of modern out of ancient times—especially of the armost revenue of India, is really indispensable. The land-tax in India, as remodelled by its Mohamedan rulers—our predecessors—is, for universality of impost, analogous to the tithes of this and of other As a general axiom, the land-tax was due from all land. That is the law; but as in our own country, the people of India are not fond of paying taxes, you will have to listen to claims of exemption on the ground, perhaps, that some ancient rajah or prince had exempted the applicant's land from taxation. But the ancient law will tell you that no prince or sovereign had a right to grant to any individual permanently an exemption from the tax on his land. This will show you, both as revenue and judicial officers, what the nature may be of the very important investigations which may come before you. I strongly recommend to you, therefore, the study of the law of India, both ancient and modern-more especially the ancient law-for through that you will be able to trace, more clearly than by any other means, the nature of the public laws and institutions of the country. to master the ancient law, you must study it in the original Arabic, in which it is written. The modern law is to be found in the Government "Regulations" and enactments. But these are not very systematically framed. Nor will you find books on law very free from ambiguity. There is however one splendid. law very free from ambiguity. There is, however, one splendid exception, although limited in extent—I mean that work which emanated from the Law Commission in Bengal, and not unfrequently called the "Macaulay Code," but which is chiefly the joint labour of that distinguished historian, and of another eminent servant of the East-India Company—my other esteemed friend, now present—Mr. John Macleod, of our civil service. That work is worthy of being studied both by the English and the Indian lawyer. It combines that accuracy of definition, closeness of reasoning, clearness of logical deduction, which is indispensable to the right understanding of any work on law. This much I have suggested to you, in order to lead your attention to this most important branch of your professional education. I would also recommend you, gentlemen, if you have an opportunity, to acquire some knowledge of those sciences which are of a practical character—such as chemistry, mineralogy, geology, practical mechanics, civil engineering. You would thus be able to lend your aid in developing the resources of the country, and to direct with skill works of public utility; for we must remember that every magistrate in India has a gaol, and that god is filled with convicts, whose labour, well-directed, would be productive of great public benefit. We have had many instances of our civil servants having, in this manner, executed works of much importance. Among others, I may name the magistrate and collector of Goruckpore, Mr. Henry Carre Tucker, the distinguished son of a distinguished father, whose talents have been eminently displayed in almost every variety of work of public utility. It was only two days ago that I received from this zealous public servant a book which, under a very modest title, lic utility. contains, as far as I have been able to judge, from cursorily going over it, an immense mass of most useful information, arranged under its proper heads, on almost every question which can be brought before the collector or magistrate. The title of it is, "My Note Book of Rules and Regulations," being notes extracted for his own use, but which cannot fail to be of the utmost value to you, gentlemen, who desire to follow in the footsteps of this talented public servant. I carnestly recommend the work this talented public servant. I carnestly recommend the work to every one of you. To you, gentlemen, who are about to leave this College for India, I would beg to say a few words. You have yet another ordeal to pass through—that of acquiring a knowledge of at least two of the vernacular languages in use at the Presidence to which you are appointed. The object of this the Presidency to which you are appointed. The object of this is too obvious to require explanation—for until you understand the language of the people, you must remain unfit to discharge any public duty. Your first anxiety must, then, be to pass through this ordeal, and to pass through it with credit to yourselves; for I can assure you from my own knowledge that your character in public opinion will be estimated very much by your career in college there. When you leave college in India, you will then, my young friends, enter upon real life; you then become effective members of the service. Every public act you perform will affect others as well as yourselves. Humble though they may be over whom your power or your influence may extend, forget not that they are your fellow-creatures—your own fellow-subjects of the British Crown; forget not that it is your duty to raise them in the scale of civilization; and that you cannot do so unless by showing them, in your own conduct and demeanour, an example of virtue. You will find the natives of India possessed of many good qualities, and, like their neighbours, not a few that are bad. To enable you to encourage the upright and to control the irregular, you must make yourselves masters, not only of their language, their customs and manners, but of your own duty. If you possess those qualifications, you will find the natives of India able and valuable assistants in the discharge of your public duty, and excellent and attached servants. And let me recommend to you, my young friends, to acquire, if you do not already possess, that steadiness of character so indispensable in a man entrusted with important public affairs. Without that, all your attainments, your first-rate talents will be of no avail. In the ordinary affairs of life the steady diligence of a fifth-rate man is more valuable than the irregular efforts of the brightest genius, which no one can rely on; and see that you neglect not, but carefully perform the most ordinary service your duty requires of you; for upon that you may be sure those under whom you act will judge of your fitness for higher employment. The Duke of Wellington, who in India commanded an army, when he came home did not refuse the command of a single battalion. With respect to your deportment towards the natives of India generally, I would strongly recommend to you the utmost forbearance. Let not any awkwardness on their part, or misun-derstanding on yours, ruffle your temper towards them. I have never known a man habitually intemperate to the natives rise to eminence in the service. There is another object to which I must call your attention, that is, economy in your expenditure. I most earnestly warn you, gentlemen, against getting into debt. From the moment a man involves himself in pecuniary difficulties, from that moment he is a slave! As you prize that manly feeling of independence which enables us to aspire to high station, scrupulously shun pecuniary embarrassment. Let me again remind you, my young friends, that you are to become members of a body to whom England has delegated higher functions, more extensive power, than has ever before been committed to any class of men-the civil administration of an empire of more than one hundred millions of subjects of the British Crown. You are to join men, many of whom, as statesmen and scholars, have shone conspicuously-and who, for devotion to the public service, high talents, energy of character, spotless integrity, have greatly upheld the British name. The honour and the reputation of that body, gentlemen, you will have to maintain. How is this to be done? I will tell you. It is by following the career of those distinguished men who have gone before you. And I am happy to find that, besides many members of our own body, we have the honour of seeing several of them here this day. Ask, my friends, Mr. Wilberforce Bird, Mr. John M'Leod, Mr. Prinsep, Sir H. Maddock, Mr. Crawford, Mr. Reid, Mr. Millet,—ask these gentlemen how they earned their high distinctions. I will answer for them. It was by their devotion to the public service, by their talents, by their energy of character, by their spotless integrity. And they will tell you that in no service on the face of the earth is a man so sure of working out his own success as in the civil service of India. But, my young friends, besides being good public servants, you must be good men. Your first duty is to your Creator. Let me beseech you, my young friends, do not neglect this. Commit yourselves habitually to His protection. He will guide you in the hour of difficulty and of danger; and, should trouble overtake you, He will be your comforter. Farewell, my young friends, and may the blessing of the Almighty ever be with you.

At the close of the address, the deputation and visitors, to-gether with the Principal and Professors, left the examination hall, and after perambulating the College grounds for a short time, repaired to the College library, where a superb luncheon was served. At the termination of the repast,

The Chairman gave "The health of the Queen," a toast which it was fitting should precede every other on all public occasions.

(Cheers.)

The Chairman said, the next toast which he had to propose was one which the Company would all gratefully join him in drinking—it was "The health of the distinguished Principal and Professors of this College." (Cheers.) It might be judged from what they had seen this day that the highest praise was due to those distinguished gentlemen for the great and successful endeavours which they had made to improve this important cducational institution. (Cheers.) He had already expressed his opinion on that subject, and he assured the Principal and Professors that that opinion was shared in by every member of the Court of Directors. (Hear, hear.) Under the distinguished guidance of the Rev. the Principal, the College had attained that high character to which it ought to aspire, and this was fully demonstrated by its efficiency in producing men fit for the highest branches of public service. To show that its efficiency had been tested in this manner, it was only necessary to point to numerous men who had proceeded from within these walls to occupy important positions under the Indian Government, and whose career had been characterized by the most remarkable success. He referred to men whom he had now the happiness to see around him, whose names he had mentioned before, but which he would now repeat,—to Mr. Wilberforce Bird, Mr. Millet, Mr. Robert Bird, Mr. Crawford, Mr. M'Leod, Sir Herbert Maddock, Mr. Prinsep, Mr. Leslie Melville, and Mr. Reid. (Cheers.) These were circumstances worthy of notice. and reasons which justified them in placing a high value upon this institution. Having made these remarks, he would sit down, after proposing the health of the eminent Principal and

Professors of the College. (Loud cheers.)

The Principal rose amidst considerable cheering, and begged to assure the Chairman and Directors that such marks of approval as they had just been pleased to exhibit were not only gratifying for the moment to himself and the professors,—they further served to encourage them in the discharge of duties which he might fairly call difficult and arduous. The special circumstances of the College rendered its administration a task of no ordinary magnitude. If there were no other peculiarity, the isolated situation of the College, marking it out for almost microscopic inspection, must prevent the task from being light. (Hear, hear.) For he had not long been connected with the College before he discovered that, owing to its lonely position -a College on a hill, where every speck was not only seen, but seen through a magnifying medium—unless they were twice as good as colleges in general, they must not expect half as good a character. Now he, for his part, had no objection to the minuteness of the inspection which was thus brought to bear upon the College. Let them have anything rather than the reputation which was dependent on concealment. He rather referred to it with honest satisfaction, because if what would be a mere spot elsewhere, became a dark stain here, it really was cause of hearty congratulation that the Directors found in this College so much to commend. (Cheers.) Not, indeed, that they were perfect. Nay, it might be easy to point out imperfections. And of this he could assure them, that, as fast as they were pointed out, they did their best to remove them; though here, as everywhere else, the faults which one man might discover a hundred might be unable to correct. (Cheers.) But, he did not hesitate to express his honest belief, that, on the whole, there could not be a better training system for the civil service of India than was furnished by the College; and believing this, he should continue, and the Professors would continue, to do their best towards sending out able and high-principled men to fill important posts in the Indian empire-men worthy to be successors to those whose names had just been mentioned. (Cheers.) He wished for men modelled after the sketch involved in the Chairman's excellent speech of this day. For that speech the College owed the warmest thanks. The civilian thanked the soldier for a lesson in war,—not, indeed, the war of armed hosts, but the war of what was truthful, and lofty, and pure, against what was false, and base, and unrighteous. (Cheers.) The College had its soldiers to train. But their battle was the battle with ignorance, with error, with oppression; their march was the march of civilization; their ensign, the development of Christian principle. (Cheers.) He was sure that they heartily wished those soldiers success; and therefore he would not device the sure that they heartly wished those soldiers success; and therefore he would not device the sure of th tain the company longer, but content himself with thanking them, in his own name, and in the name of the Professors, for the honour they had done them, and the kindness they had shown them, on the present occasion. (Loud cheers.)

The company then left the library, and, shortly afterwards, the Chairman, deputation, and visitors, returned to town by a special train.

The examination of the candidates for admission into the College next term will be held at the East-India House on the 26th, 27th, and 28th instant.

The next term will commence on Monday the 10th of September.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MR. THOMAS HENRY BROOKE. - The decease of this gentle. man was announced in our last Obituary; but his merits us a public servant, as well as the excellence of his character and qualities as a man, entitle him to a more prominent notice. Mr. Brooke was in the civil service of the East-India Company in the island of St. Helena during a period of forty-four years; in the course of which, the temporary government twice devolved upon him; having, in the first instance, succeeded Sir Hudson Lowe. He was the zealous coadjutor of that governor in establishing, with the concurrence of the inhabitants, a measure for the progressive abolition and final extinction of slavery in the island, and was afterwards equally the supporter of Governor Walker in accelerating the fulfilment of that object. The public are indebted to Mr. Brooke for the only detailed historical account of St. Helena, from its first discovery in 1501 to the year 1806, continued in a second edition to 1833. He was nephew to the Colonel Robert Brooke of whom a memoir is inserted in the Asiatic Journal for March, 1836. Mr. Brooke died at Plymouth, on the 19th June, at the advanced age of 75.

THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY'S pensioners are now to be under the charge of the various staff officers of pensioners of the districts wherein the men reside.

ENGAGEMENT OF SHIPS. - The Alfred, Monarch, Marlborough, and Collingwood, have been engaged for the conveyance of troops to Calcutta.
